exampled opportunity, and their use of it at the New Orleans meeting will excite world-wide concern. At that convention will be focussed the result of the ideas presented by tens of thousands of planters in their preliminary township, county and State gatherings. They must entirely discard the notion that there is any reason for antagonism between themselves and the spinners. Large profits to mills do not necessarily follow low prices for cotton. Indeed, the reverse generally holds. Abnormally high prices, however, such as obtained during the height of the Sully campaign, are confessedly inimical to the man ufacturer. He desires reasonable stability much more ardently than he craves for low prices.

With this as clearing the ground, an examination of the position of the growers discloses his past apathy towards the doings of formed as to the volume of demand and read what the spinners are thinking and doing ! Yet their prosperity is in the end dependent on these things. The daily press gives little attention to such matters, because of the neutrality of the planters. If they ever develop a real interest in these affairs, their numbers bulk large enough to command a ready response from the news gatherer, who ever has an ear to the ground to discover as far in advance as he may those things his readers are likely to be interest
