A week ago a letter addressed, as usual, to "Mrs. John J. Tonkin," vant appeared here. He gave out prostration, to friends that he was on his way to New York city from Chicago and was stopping over a day to call on friends. The letter was mailed in the local postoffice, on May 11. Pinkerton men are now inquiring into the actions and antecedents of the servant while in Paterson and

"The letters are not the work of "With each one there has been a finely executed drawing of the face of our little daughter, sometimes in pencil and sometimes with a pen. Until the finding of the murdered body of little Cora Sweet in the woods here a few days ago, I did not think very seriously of the matter aside from placing trusted servants with our daughter whenever I was not with her. For two years she has been carefully guarded, and now the servants and the members of our family are more vigilant, if possible, than we have been.

"During the winter we made our home in New York at Bretton Hall. and the same vigilance was exercised there. When the dead body of Cora Sweet was found in the woods near here recently and the story of that awful crime was print-ed, we naturally thought a great constitutionality so rashly proed, we naturally thought a great deal of the threats made against our own daughter, and Mr. Tonkin-offered a reward of $50,000 for reases the ermine and the dignity of the State—the United States revenue onable proof of the identity of the guilty person or persons. It is not the work of any person having any enmity against us. It is a case of criminals trying to extort money by threatening the life of our daughter.'

On the day after their arrival home another letter was received. It was postmarked New York and demanded $50,000, with a threat of kidnapping Rosamond. The border of the letter bore a series of penand ink pictures illustrating the various methods of killing Rosa-
