Cotton Talk Thrills the World.

Never did a year begin that promised to be more interesting than the one we start on today.

Cotton, the great staple of th South, the acknowleged King of the world's agriculture, the arbiter of from 12 to 25. Other things too the world's commerce, is bounding upward, and nobody dares to throw himself in its pathway to attempt to impede its progress. Where is it going to stop? It is doubtful whether there is any stopping place. It is now rapidly making for 15 cents, and some think it will reach 20 cents before mid-summer. It has passed all the marks of the last quarter century, and whether it goes much higher or not, no other commodity of agriculture or commerce will be able o approach it in interest. From the men on the Southern farms who are starting the plows for another crop to the mill owner on the Balkan slopes and the Cooley laborer in the heart of China, there is nobody who is not asking, "How is cotton to-day?" The Southern farmer is calculating what he will make on the bales he is holding from the last crop and what he will get for the next. The speculator is counting his profits or losses; this depending on the end he is pulling. The manu facturer is trying to solve the ques tion as to whether he can get enough for his goods to keep his mills supplied with cotton. And the wearer of cotton goods everywhere is guess ing about how much his next new shirt will cost. Cotton certainly has a front place on the stage, and wil keep it throughout the year 1904 "The South is the cotton" and this is the South's year. We hope the pric will stay up till our farmers ge another crop ready to sell. And in saying this, we are glad know that nobody in the South i

But the news about cotton is not the only thing that promises interest that this not uncommon for a child it is be born assumed and in more a cash the flesh or it, when the child write a cash it is to the offices for the dead.
