Everyone has a different theory, everyone believes the case will have a different ending. Interest in the case is not confined to New York alone, but every newspaper throughout the country is eager to get specials dealing with the latest developments in the case. The prominence of the parties, the newspaper noto riety they had acquired, and the attendant features of the killing make the case one of the most interesting in the last 25 years. It so happened that the Observer's New York correspondent was present when the murder took place and was an eye-witness to ome of its details. On the night of June 25 "Mamselle Champagne," a new musical play, was to be presented on the Madison Square Roof Garden for the first time and Mr. Stoddart, acting dramatic critic for the paper on which we are both employed. invited me to go along to see the play.

Unlike most roof gardens, the Madison Square Garden is really on the roof and has no top covering. The roof is in the shape of a parallelogram with the little stage in the center of one of the sides. In front are the rows of wooden opera chairs. To the right and back as you sit down are groups of tables and chairs where one can sit of the right hand row of seats.
