Dr. Alexander Says Cotton Seed Are Worth 65 Cents.

Now let us look at the cotton seed question, and see what they are worth, both to the farmer and the manufacturer. We will consider first the value of seed as a fertilizer. The nitrogen phosphoric acid and potash in a ton of seed, at the market price of those ingredients of fertilizers, are worth at least fifteen dollars. The humus would probably be worth a dollar more—yes, several dollars more. While it has no market value at so much per ton, yet it is the most important constituent of our soils. No crops can be grown successfully without it. Most of our soils need humus more than other plant foods. Next the food value of cotton seed. We can approximate this by comparison with other food-stuffs. Comparing the analysis of cotton seed with that of corn, a ton of cotton seed is worth at least $20. In feeding the seed, we get 80 per cent of the manurial value in the manure. This would be about $15, which added to $20, the feed value, and we have $35 as the real value of the seed per ton, as a feed and manure. Now let us look at the market value of the products of a ton of seed. The government bulletins tell us that a ton of cotton seed contains about 50 gallons of oil, but as yet the mills have been able to get out only 45 gallons. This oil is quoted at 59 cents per gallon, making $26.55 for the oil alone. There is 800 pounds of meal in a ton of seed, which retails at $1.50, making $12 for the meal. There is 900 pounds of hulls, which retail for 40 cents per hundred weight, making $3.60 for the hulls in a ton. Add to this the value of the 25 pounds of linters (I don't know the price of linters) and we have at least $43 as the value of the products of a ton of cotton seed, which would be about 65 cents per bushel.

The reader can draw his own conclusions from the above figures. Of course the manufacturer is entitled to a legitimate profit on his investment, and to the support of public sentiment in what he has done toward the development of our country. But isn't it true that the manufacturer receives far more for changing the form of the raw material and fitting it for market, than does the farmer and laboring man for producing it? Is it not true that the great bulk of the wealth of this country has passed and is passing from the hand of the men who really produced it from old mother earth, into the hands of the manufacturers and the distributors, the franchise corporations and the banking monopoly of our country?

A human hair of average thickness can support a load of six and one-quarter ounces, and the average number of hairs on the head is a-bought 30,000. A woman's long hair has a total strength of more than five tons, and this strength can be increased one-third by twisting the hair. The ancients made practical use of the strength of human hair. The cords of the Romans catapults where made of the hair of slaves, and it is recorded that the free women of Carthage offered their luxuriant tresses for the same use when their city was besieged by the Romans.

THE PRESIDENT IN NORTH CAROLINA

WILMINGTON DOES HONOR TO HIM AND HERSELF.

Mr. Taft, Spending a Full Day at the Coast City, Pleases the Great Throng by His Many Appearances and is Himself Highly Pleased With the Cordiality of His Reception.

President Taft literally smiled upon the people of Wilmington and other parts of North Carolina all last Tuesday. The warmth of the reception was very pleasing to the President and the people certainly enjoyed the many opportunities offered during the day to look at close range upon the chief executive of the nation. He appeared many times on the street, so much so that no man had any excuse for not getting a good view. To the editor of The Journal, who was among the many who went down to enjoy the occasion, one of the colored barbers of the city expressed it, when asked if he had seen the President, "Oh, yes," was the reply, "he has been passing along the street here all day." After reviewing the white school children in one part of the city and the colored ones in another, Mr. Taft and his party spent the middle part of the day on the revenue cutter Seminole in a trip down the river. Returning in the afternoon, his public address was made to an immense throng from a platform at the City Hall, where the park and two streets gave ample room for the crowd to stand.

Welcomed by Governor Kitchin.

The President was most heartily welcomed to Wilmington and North Carolina by Governor W. W. Kitchin in his usual earnest and eloquent manner. This was the second time that Governor Kitchin has had the pleasure of welcoming President Taft to North Carolina, the first occasion being in Charlotte the 20th of last May. The popular Governor arose amidst the enthusiastic applause of his fellow citizens and it was minutes before he was able to proceed. "My fellow countrymen," was Governor Kitchin's greeting, "I have read somewhere that Paul said to the jailer, 'Be not afraid for we are all here.' The significance of the quotation was immediately grasped and the crowd applauded. "We expected," continued Governor Kitchin, "to see all the people in New Hanover here, but we are gratified to see everybody in North Carolina present."

"This is the second opportunity I have had to welcome to North Carolina the Chief Magistrate of the Republic. The first time was in Charlotte the 20th of last May. It was a most disagreeable day, and yet gladness departed not from the people, because they are strong and loyal Americans, who rejoiced because the President had honored North Carolina with a visit. How much more do these thousands, with no warring elements, but all nature smiling, rejoice and give a genuine American welcome to America's chief! Nothing that I could say could add joy to the occasion. What the people have already done can not be magnified, and yet it is fitting that I should extend in behalf of the people of North Carolina an official welcome that every critic may know from the mountains to the sea, all North Carolina welcomes President Taft. You, Mr. President, are about to complete a remarkable journey—you have visited the greatest cities of the continent—and at last come into America's own Sunny South. I am glad that you have been kindly dealt with and bring to us the smile that won't come off."

Governor Kitchin then referred to the unity of the North and South. "We are proud of this Republic," he said, "it is ours, we rejoice in its possession and have confidence in its future. It is true that a little more than a generation ago the South thought it could get along without the North, but the North knew it could not get along without the South. But all of that is in the past and has been forgotten. "I am glad, Mr. President, that you have come into the land of cotton. I know that 14 cents cotton makes you smile. Your countrymen will give you credit for this 14 cent cotton and you will call this a pleasure for decades." The Governor then spoke of the increase in mining during the past 30 years, the South now mining more than was mined by the whole country at that time, and the wealth of the South is greater than the whole country in '61. He gave an apt illustration of agricultural production in the South. Two Americans visited England and sat at a table opposite two English men. The conversation naturally drifted to a comparison of the two countries. "You have a great country," said one of the Englishmen, "but you have no enterprise." One of the Americans answered: "We have in my county, Hyde, in North Carolina, a large dairy that produces 1,000,000 pounds of butter and 1,000,000 pounds of cheese every week," and sought to prove his statement by the other American, who said: "I don't know just how many cows the dairyman has or how much butter and cheese he gets, but I do know he has 12 saw mills and that they are run with buttermilk." The crowd yelled.

Governor Kitchin said that no where in all America could a welcome to the President be more appropriately extended than in Wilmington. This city shared in the glory of the Revolution, shared in the glory of the development that followed, shared in the Civil War and in the later years has shaken the chains and gone forward. The Governor was certain that President Taft stood ready and willing to give to this section anything that he would to a city of Massachusetts, or any other State. "In your long career, Mr. President, I dare say you have never faced a better, a braver or truer audience than greets you here today, and I can say from an honest heart that an abler or more illustrious man never visited North Carolina." The Governor expressed the sentiments of the vast throng for he was wildly applauded. "He is distinguished by service, distinguished by nature, distinguished by the highest position known—he is worthy of that respect and affection you show for him. Carolinians all, I introduce to you, His Excellency, the President of the United States, our common country."

President Taft was forced to bow his acknowledgement of continued cheering for some time before beginning his speech. He said:

"Governor Kitchin, Ladies and Gentlemen, Citizens of Wilmington and North Carolina: I have visited North Carolina before. I have had the honor to be welcomed by your distinguished Governor, your distinguished Senator, Senator Overman, and the Congressmen who represent you at Washington, and I feel at home with you. "In visiting North Carolina I have found that you were a little earlier in doing everything that had to be done in the crisis of the nation than anybody else. I have found that you made a declaration of independence at Mecklenburg about a year before we thought of it in other parts of the country. And I understand that you suppressed the stamp tax and emptied out the tea a very considerable time before they had that tea party in Boston harbor. It is, therefore, a matter of extreme self-congratulation on my part to have from your distinguished men and from the people of a State like this, such a cordial welcome."

"We have been traveling the streets of your city since early morning, and I feel reasonably certain now that I know every face in North Carolina. In the course of that travel we met that beautiful bevy of your children arranged according to the national flag, and we saw in their bright eyes and well-nourished cheeks and chubby little legs, evidence of the prosperity of this community—a prosperity that recognizes its responsibilities by putting the profits that you make out of cotton into education."

"I observe that you count a good deal on the long leaf pine, and I congratulate you that you are the third or fourth State in the treasure of timber in the United States. But I urge upon you the lesson that the history of the timber treasure of other States and its destruction ought to teach you in the preservation of that which makes your State rich to-day among the States. We have reached a time in the history of this country when if we would have timber at all we must pursue the common sense course of treating it in such a way that it will reproduce itself, and of cutting it in such a way that we shall not destroy it altogether. We must preserve it from destructive fires, and we must take steps of caution and precaution in order to do that. You have within the boundary of your State a gentleman named Vanderbilt, who has gone before any one in the science of forestry, and I congratulate you on having that example that thereby you may formulate laws which shall preserve to you the timber of your State, continue your wealth and prosperity, and form a model to other States in the preservation of that which God has given you and preserved to this moment."

"You have also 14 cent cotton. The Governor said fourteen cents I have just come from the State of South Carolina where their new Senator has made it 15 cents, and I am a little bit doubtful whether we ought to admit 14 cents; at any rate 14 or 15 cents is enough to make every one smile that comes within the borders of the cotton raising States. It brings about a wealth to the cotton producer and the farmer and it strengthens that element in our community that ought to be and is the basis of the progress of our civilization. I congratulate the people of North Carolina that next to the State of Mississippi it has a population more devoted to the soil and its cultivation than any other State in the Union. You do not have large cities, and I do not think that a defect at all in your civilization. The fact is that the tendency toward concentration of population in the cities is a tendency that ought to be restrained. Country life ought to be made more comfortable and attractive. The pursuit of agriculture, the profession of farming today may well attract the mental and manual activity of men of the highest education, of the highest culture and of the highest ambition. Within the last two decades agriculture has proceeded with giant strides, and you yourselves in the cultivation of cotton, realize that today you make use of your cotton seed and many other things connected with the growth of cotton which twenty years ago you throw aside as worthless. So it is in the growth of everything that comes from the ground. The study of soil, the diversification of crops, and all those principles that make for better agriculture are what will enable one farmer, if he knows them, to be a success and will leave another farmer, because he ignores them, to be a failure."

from one side into the fort of another, and what endowing a sacrifice the opponents could make. All that history you cherish and we cherish, but it does not make the slightest difference in our brotherly feeling, in our fraternal desire always to exhibit and manifest that love of each other which comes of standing elbow to elbow in the march of progress to make this nation, great as it is, even greater to afford under our country's flag an equal opportunity to all to work out their fortunes and to elevate the moral standards of manhood, so that above all in the type of American we can point to character as the thing to remember."

Negro Lynched in Illinois.

Will James, the negro who murdered Miss Annie Pelley, was killed here tonight by a mob. James was strung up to the public arch, in the rope broke and at least five hundred shots were poured into his body. He made a partial confession and implicated another negro, Arthur Alexander, whom the mob is now searching for.

James was lynched in the most prominent square of the city, and hanged to the arch at Eighth and Commercial streets.

Women present were the first to pull the rope. When it broke, the frenzy of the mob was uncontrollable and they fired volley after volley into James' body, shooting him to pieces. The mob then dragged the body over the streets for more than a mile, to Twenty-sixth and Elm streets, in an alley, and burned it where the murder was committed.
