Nance's Blood and Tonic Pills

As a general alterative tonic and blood purifier few preparations of more merit than Nance's Blood and Tonic Pills have ever been offered. It contains iron in a palatable form, in combination with six other ingredients, every one of which is of well-known virtue in its action upon the blood. This preparation tones up the system, thereby aiding the processes of nutrition and assimilation. Recommended in the treatment of any disease arising from a poor condition of the blood.

WHY ENDURE SUMMER COLDS?
It isn't necessary to have a stuffed head, running nose. To cough your head off as it were. All you need to do is to use Dr. Bell's Pine-Tar-Honey. The soothing and healing balsams open the clogged air passages and in a short time you get relief and start on the road to recovery. Your nose stops running, you cough less and you know you are getting better. Get a bottle, use as directed. Keep what is left as a cough and cold insurance.

A Healthy Preacher—Other Matters.

Rev. John W. Elkins of Pageland is the healthiest man in Chesterfield county. This statement may be challenged, but the man who does so must be a remarkable man. Mr. Elkins does not tell his age, but he is on "this side of forty." (You may guess which side.) He has never had a headache nor a contagious disease. In his life he has been sick enough to go to bed but four times and on neither of these occasions was the illness at all serious. He drinks no coffee, tea or other stimulants. He takes a daily morning bath, winter and summer, and sleeps with windows open all the year. He does not know what a dull drowsy feeling is but is always fresh and vigorous. Always feel just like I look when you see me on the streets" said he, and those who know him will agree that he always has the bearing of the healthiest and most robust of men. His statement that his health is perfect is, from all appearances, absolutely the truth.

Mr. W. J. Hicks last Wednesday secured the contract to rebuild the bridge over Lynches river at Cooke's mill, the price being four hundred dollars. This bridge is 154 feet long. The new bridge will be several feet lower than the old one, but will be anchored by wire cables, and the mud sills are to be placed on bed rock and pinned to the rock.

Mr. R. F. Smith has sold a 75-acre tract of land near the State line north of Pageland to Mr. L. B. King of the Matthews section of Mecklenburg county. Mr. King will move to this farm next fall. Mr. Smith has moved back to Pageland.

Mrs. Kate Rayfield, widow of the late Mr. John Rayfield, died at her home in the Salem community yesterday morning about 3 o'clock. She had been sick for several months but was not thought to be in a critical condition until Monday night a short time before her death. She was about 61 years old, and had been a member of Salem Presbyterian church for many years. She was a Christian.

Sheriff Griffith of Union county captured a still in Mr. Stafford Belk's pasture in Lanes Creek township Friday morning. It had just been set up and an attempt made to distill some liquor or brandy, but with poor success. No arrests were made.

The Little Sufferers

Marshville Home.
Mr. S. W. Sinclair of New York is here visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Sinclair. Mr. Sinclair tells an interesting story of the paralysis he now on in the city. Just before leaving he made a trip through one of the hospital wards where some three or four hundred children lay suffering with the awful disease. He states that the little fellows range in ages from six months to five years old. They experience little pain, so far as outward appearances are concerned. The doctors have no remedy for the disease and are only hoping that cool weather will bring relief. To see such a vast number of innocent babies giving up their lives in this way is a pitiable sight indeed.

Hen in the Flood—Rescued After a Perilous Journey.

An enterprising black hen that took refuge on a pack of lumber on the Meadow Mill Co.'s yard in North Wilkesboro during the big flood, and that was observed by several persons perched upon the lumber as it was carried down stream by the flood, has been located in the lower end of Yadin county, in Dinken's bottom, alive and unharmed in her perilous journey. The pack of lumber that bore the hen safely through so many dangers and perils of the raging waters lodged on an island and persons without view saw the hen and rescued her after the water receded. Mr. J. D. Moore, president of the Meadows Mill Co., the owner of the hen, said the last time he saw her was when she passed Smoot's tannery, in midstream. He will have her shipped back here and will place her on exhibition at the Wilkes county fair in 1917.

A THING THE WORLD IS NOW QUESTIONING.

Some of the World's Land Barons

Half a century ago the government of Mexico gave Don Luis Terrazas 17,000,000 acres of Mexican land for his services in clearing the State of Chihuahua of brigands and for his military successes against the French under Maximilian, who had planned to become the Emperor of Mexico. He was worth a billion dollars, the landlord of 40,000 tenants, 10,000 of whom were his own private hired men in charge of his 2,000,000 head of horses and cattle and his 300,000 calves. There were two towns on his estate, and it took a railroad train eight hours to cross it. He lived with his family in a baronial castle. In 1913 Villa drove the octogenarian Don to the United States and divided his estate among the widows and orphans of the rebel soldiers. At present he is living with his family in San Antonio, Texas, and has only a few millions of dollars left.

Every time William Randolph Hearst allows his glance to stray towards Mexico his blood boils hot. "Home, sweet home, be it only one million five hundred thousand acres, there's no place like home," he sings; and, calling for Arthur Brisbane and five phonographs, he sets Arthur to work dictating five editorials at once on the Mexican situation. Mr. Hearst is one of the largest landlords in the world. To get to his place in Mexico, you cross the border and turn to the left. Walk along the road until you come to his front gate, turn in and walk forty miles, and you are at his front door.

Every morning somebody knocks at the door of the Duke of Westminster and says, "Good morning, Duke; here's yesterday's rent." The Duke sticks it in his pocket nonchalantly, without counting it, for he knows that it's just an even $5000. He is the richest landlord in England. Every time the lease of one of his London properties expires his Grace renews it at an enormously enhanced rent. The Duke is only thirty-seven.

The landlord, Felix Isman, makes no secret of the fact that he started life as an office-boy, who could neither read nor write, at $2.25 a week. After a year of earnest work he was raised to $2.50. He it was who bought the site of the United States Mint in Philadelphia, putting the deal through on a shoestring and stretching the payments out over nine years. Nine years he collected the rents, while the land increased enormously in value, and the city worried itself sick trying to collect the taxes. "Better a vacant house than a bad tenant," is his motto. What 'd'you mean by "bad," Felix? One who asks to have the parlor repapered every nine years?

It's wonderful, when you come to think of it, that only a little more than a hundred years ago the founder of the Astor fortune came over from Waldorf and found New York a vacant lot. He bought nice corners from the Indians at about one red bead a front foot, and handed them down to his descendants. Today tenements, apartments, theaters, fashionable hotels, and big office buildings pay 24-year-old Vincent Astor some millions a year.

Baron Edouard de Rothschild of Paris is the head of the $4,000,000 banking house of Rothschild, which draws its income from millions of acres of land in all of the six continents. The Rothschild rules, which have been handed down in the family for a hundred years, are: 1. Remain faithful to the law of Moses. 2. Remain united to the end. 3. Consult your mother. 4. Look on the family wealth as a perpetual trust. 5. Never brook disobedience. 6. Intermarry.

The Marquis of Clanricarde, "the cruellest landlord in Ireland," died a few months ago at the age of eighty-four in obscure London bachelor rooms. Though his realm consisted of 57,000 acres in South Galway, he lived there for only one short period in his life. During the Fair Rent Campaign the tenants were driven off his estate, and for twenty years 400 of these exiled people lived miserably along the road to his estate, forming a starved little colony known as Evicted Village.

The Duke of Bedford's yearly income from his London property was a cool $10,000,000 for a long time; but when Lloyd-George's land taxes went into effect in 1914, it became only half that. The poor Duke was forced to sell nineteen acres of his London property for an approximate $30,000,000. When his heir, Lord Tavistock, came of age, and the tenants of his country estate gave the young man a handsome present, the Duke could give in return nothing but his cordial thanks.

Three times a week little Mrs. Rebecca A. D. Strobe, aged seventy-one, climbs the wooden stairway of No. 175 Broadway to a musty office with battered desks and chairs and well-worn linoleum on the floor. From the center is administered the $25,000,000 Wendel estate for the sole benefit of four old ladies—all in charge of sister Rebecca. The real estate rules of the office are as follows: 1. Never mortgage anything. 2. No property for sale. 3. Remember, Broadway moves north ten blocks a decade. 4. Tenants must make their own repairs. Mrs. Strobe is a landlady willing to lose money for a principle. Thousands of dollars in rentals she has sacrificed because the Wendels won't lease to saloons or restaurants; nor will they allow electric signs on their property.

Frederick Weyerhaeuser came to this country from Germany eighty-two years ago and went into the carpentry business. Not making a success of that, "Dutch Fred" went West to take up lumbering. He took up quite a lot—thirty million acres of rich timber-land, an area equivalent to six New Jerseys. His sawmills, sprinkled all over the lumber territory of the Northwest (one of them in Orofino, Idaho, was a mile square) turned out a fortune of millions. Because Weyerhaeuser was a taciturn, parsimonious man, nobody knew the extent of his wealth until he died in 1914 in his modest St. Paul home. "The mouth is made to eat with," was the maxim he used in replying to the inquisitive ones. A Maxim silencer, as it were.

Outen-Hailey.

Correspondence of The Journal.
Mr. Jesse Outen and Miss M. E. Hailey, both of Faulks community, were married Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents. On account of the large number present the ceremony was performed on the veranda.
The bridal party quietly took their places as Miss Ethel Snyder played Lohengrin's wedding march. Rev. E. C. Snider then spoke the words which made them one.
The attendants were Misses Beatrice Phifer, Mamie Ross, Mamie Tadlock, Eva Outen and Messrs. Cecil Braswell, Pearl Collins, Fred Lowry and James Helms.
The bride is the attractive daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Hailey, the groom, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Outen.
These popular young people have the best wishes of their many friends.
