Lancaster county has come to the front to day. The old and new county, the birthplace of Andrew Jackson and many other heroes, the past four years has made greater progress than in any other county, industrial and financial standpoint, than ever in her history. The time was—and it had not been so many years ago—Lancaster county was looked upon by outsiders as one of the most lawless counties in the State, and the writer has oftentimes heard the remark "you had better not go to Lancaster if you don't want to get killed." This was for reasons through the State, but everything has changed and today there is not a more industrious, peaceable, law-abiding people to be found anywhere than in Lancaster county. —Lancaster News.

The Journal is delighted over the transformation of our neighboring county from a backwoods community into a veritable paradise, but we would have the editor of the News to remember that Andrew Jackson was not born in South Carolina. Parson, the historian, after weeks of investigation on the spot, ascribed Jackson was born in Union county, North Carolina, and so published the fact to the world. Editor Craven need not dare start a controversy over Jackson's birthplace. The Journal heartily backed in the opinion of the N. S. Shuman and by John Barr, who are both well known in the business of the State. We are certain Editor Craven will not be satisfied until a well-known fact which was so fairly set out in the paper is set out in the News.
