"Is it true," asked The Journal man, as he washed into Senator R. B. Hedwine's law office Wedensday asternoon, "that you have been rotained by a Union county farmer to have one of his creditors to take in a burgy and male on which he held a mortgage?"

"Yes," smallfight replied Mr. Redwine, "and it was the most novel case that has come into my hands during the thirty years that I have been practicing. I doubt if any other lawyer in the country has had a similar matter to adjust."

Thou he proceeded to tell the story.

"I was met on the street the other duri," he said, by a certain farmer, who explained that his creditor had mal refused to take in a mute and huggy out which he held a mortgage.

Front Porch Huge.

"The "porch" at the Harding house is a huge covered veranda, with a decided rotunda effect on one side. No doubt that in other years on summer days, it has been tastefully furnished with wicker furniture, but this summer it has been bare, making room for the hundreds of people who climbed to it on "front porch days."

In personal conversation. Harding struck a philosophic note when she declared that she thought women had not yet realized how much they can accomplish in world through the medium of the
