SUBSTITUTES FOR MEN SUBJECT GREAT TALK

Exponents of the New Order Are Want To Think of Great Organizations and Forget Individuals

With the death a few months ago at the age of seventy-eight of a modest and self-effacing but brilliant and fearless journalist, the newspapers with which he had been associated pointed out how the eventual downfall of the corrupt Tweed Ring in New York City politics was largely due to this one man's masterly handling of the opening assault a full half a century before. Only a few weeks later Dr. Charles K. Parkhurst, the clergyman whose crusading efforts did so much to defeat another corrupt political ring a generation later, reached his eightieth birthday. In speaking of the crime wave which has disturbed the metropolis for several years he said:

"It is true that he"—the police commissioner—"has summoned to his aid an enormous multiplicity and variety of instrumentalities, but we ought to be discriminating enough to understand that the power of an executive does not reside in the machinery that he sets in operation but resides in the man's own interior genius of command—as when the Almighty said 'Let there be light, and there was light.' That is executive power. All else is the stimulation of power, and so evidently counterfeit as to be ineffective."

"I learned that lesson twenty-five years ago in my two years' conflict with the Tammany superintendent of police, Thomas Byrnes. If he wanted a thing done he said 'Let it be done.' If he wanted every rum shop and disorderly house in the city to suspend operations he simply said 'Close up; and they were all closed up and remained so until he said 'Open up.' Every now and then we are told by someone whose positiveness is equalled only by his lack of historical perspective that all the old-time leaders have gone and mass of group action is the dominant force of today."

"The great editors, preachers, business men and educators have passed away," says one exponent of the new order. "We don't think of Rockefeller in oil or of Carnegie in steel. We just think of great companies and syndicates."

But common every day experience proves that such a statement is untrue. Just because prominent figures in industry or reform or journalism are passing away at eighty or thereabouts, why necessarily jump to the conclusion that the work of the world is being carried forward only by companies, syndicates, masses and groups? The old conspicuous leaders are always passing while the new are in process of development. The importance of the mass and the group is not belittled merely because no clean-cut piece of work, no real achievement is possible without the devoted effort of one man or a few individuals.

Victory over one or more of the world's worst diseases has been achieved largely through the efforts of a certain liberally endowed foundation for medical research. Shall we ascribe this to the foundation itself, to the efficacy of a massive institutionalism? Tommy! All the money was given by a single individual who happened to be a genius in an important industry, and the actual work of discovering and combating the causes of disease has been done by a handful of scientific specialists, a dozen at the most.

Does any city clean up its crime, does any court system clear away its calendar, does any Federal department make a record, does any state charitable institution substantially reduce the sum of human misery, does any city drive out commercial frauds or financial swindlers unless a few individuals or more commonly a lone individual exercises real power and works for a desired end, regardless of his own comfort and leisure? For that matter, does any banker lend freely to a corporation, does any investing group believe in a stock or bond, unless there is confidence and trust in both the integrity and the ability of a small group of executives or even of a single executive?

Whenever a business enterprise falls upon evil days—and thousands of them have in the last year or two—no one attempts to diagnose the trouble or prescribe a remedy without first making sure whether those in command are honest and able or dishonest and incapable. The very writer and lecturer who says that the great leaders have passed away would not think of investing his own savings in an enterprise whose executives he positively knew to be without qualities of leadership. Only a mental defective would dream of deliberately intrusting money to persons known to be totally devoid of such qualities.

It has long been said that if you want to get a thing done go to someone who is already very busy. Why is it that in every town and village a comparatively small group of people serve on nearly all the committees and carry the burden of civic work? In a town where there are scores of childless married women with ample means, several servants and good health, a few busy mothers of several children, in none too good health, with relatively little money and only part of the time of one maid, are constantly asked to undertake various forms of work for the public benefit. Why? Because every one knows they have the essential qualities and capacities.

If leadership is a thing of the past the outlook is dark indeed. But the evidence is strangely lacking. Even labor unions, where group action is magnified to the utmost, have their leaders, and very able, influential and conspicuous they often are. Indeed both in this country and England a few labor leaders have been accused in recent years of running the country, of vetoing policies of government itself, of forming a supergovernment. Socialist parties have their leaders, men who make themselves heard, and even in that paradise of proletarian dictatorship, in that Mecca of the downtrodden masses, Russia, there seem to be a number of astute and outstanding leaders—Lenine, Trotzky, Ticheterin, Krassin, and so on. Human leadership is an inheritance of the race. It is due to the possession of super qualities, or at least of outstanding qualities; and those qualities in turn are found in some men and not in others because of the slow process of evolution through untold ages. Leadership may take new forms, but the thing itself is embedded in the very nature of man. One might as well talk about new conditions doing away with hunger and with love.

TWO OFFICERS KILL A BAD CRAZY CITIZEN

Had Wounded One and Was Firing at Another When He Himself Was Shot

Greenville, S. C., June 10.—After shooting Deputy Sheriff Ben Parris, when an attempt was made to arrest him on a lunacy warrant, Dargan Beaco, 50-year-old farmer of near Greer, was almost instantly killed near his home yesterday afternoon when a fusillade of shots were returned by the wounded officer and Deputy Sheriff E. S. Cothran, and a bullet clipped his left shoulder, piercing his lungs and lodging in his right arm.

Deputy Parris was rushed to the city hospital here, and is reported as painfully though not seriously injured, over 100 shots of about number six size had taken effect in his left leg and left side and left hand.

Deputy Parris and Deputy G. L. Jones attempted to arrest the man Friday night, but on account of leaving the warrant behind, and because Beaco drew his knife suggestively, when mention of his going to Greenville was made, the officers withdrew in hopes of returning today and persuading him to accompany them without difficulty.

When Deputy Parris returned this morning with Deputy Cothran to get the man, who, it is said, has terrified the neighborhood with his threats and cruelty to his family, they sighted him in a field nearby. When they stepped from the car and approached in a friendly manner, in an effort to spirit him away, the man retreated several steps, and, picking up a single barrel shotgun, ordered the officers to leave his premises, firing at Deputy Parris when he uttered the command.

When the officer was shot Deputy Cothran leaped behind a terrace, and, with the wounded officer, emptied his pistol, the deluded man loaded his gun a second time, and, throwing it to his shoulder, fired at the officer. Then, loading a third time, discharged it in the direction of Officer Cothran, the bullets clipping the top of the terrace.

As the man attempted to push a third shell into the barrel, the gun refused to breach, and the fatal bullet took effect in the man's body. Falling backwards, he died before he could be carried to the car. The body was rushed on to Greenville by Deputy Cothran, together with the wounded officer.

Beaco, it is said, was held at one time in the state asylum.

Mourners Breaking the Speed Limit

(N. C. Christian Advocate)

Much has been said about the undue haste of these present times. Of the urgent demands for short sermons till they are now down to ten and twelve minutes; of the demands for short skirts till they are now up to the knees or "a little rise;" but to Rev. W. H. Nelson of San Francisco belongs the palm for stories of undue haste, as contained in the following:

"Recently a policeman in the city of San Francisco arrested an auto load of mourners for speeding. They were going through the crowded Mission District at a thirty-five-mile-an-hour clip. They explained to the officer that they were merely trying to catch up with the corpse. When they got to the cemetery in San Mateo they caught their first glimpse of the hearse, and they found the undertaker in a nervous stew because they were so slow."

Now we submit this story from the far west without comment except to say that the Rev. W. H. Nelson is the editor of the Pacific Methodist Advocate, a minister of good standing in his church.

The girl question is, "Has he got a car?"

BAREFOOT GOLF THE LATEST CRAZE

Miss Margaret Young has set the pace for barefoot golf and now the blue society set of the East can be seen out-a-mornings seeking health, barelegged on the links, believing the early dew is the keynote of continued vigor and the foe of wrinkles.

20 YEARS FAITHFUL, NOW SUPERINTENDENT

Miss Harriet de Kraft, after 20 years of faithful service, has been appointed Superintendent of Buildings and Grounds for the Congressional Library. She has the honor of being the first woman ever to hold this position.
