The Fear of Thunder.

"Electric storms are far less danerous than the majority of people magine," writes Edward W. Bok in lune Ladies' Home Journal. "That a severe lightning storm is terrifying admits of no question, and will some times bring uneasiness to the heart of the strongest man. But the real danger is slight. The chance of lightning striking a house, for example, is not one in a million. Particularly is this true in cities, strung as most of them are with electric wires. It is significant that so far as the very-day man is concerned there is no gold in circulation in this country. It is certain that all the harm that may be done by "driving coinage of silver," has already been done. The bankers take pains to with hold all the gold and treasury notes that come into their hands. The result is contraction of currency. No matter what the stated circula tion per capita is, the real circulation is only the amount of the silver coin, silver certificates and bank notes; for these are the only kinds of money in the hands of the people question, or even to have unchangeable opinions on it; but we cannot be blind to the facts: The money of the country is to a degree in a condition similar to a raft of logs congested in a river; and something must be done to break the raft, before a beginning toward better times may be made. -- Bibical Recorder.
