"Thou shalt not steal" is a valid ssue to make with the republican tariff policy. The whole arid lands irrigation graft is a plan to rob Peter, John and James to pay political debts and party retainer fees to Paul, the western apostle of paternalism and assisted

"Thou shalt not steal" would answer with a plain, unimpeachable principle the specious and impudent demands for ship subsidies-the scheme for putting many millions of the people's money on the profit side of the ledgers of American ship owners who even now do not know what to do with their profits from current business.

For five years this handful of braves defied the government, hiding in the impenetrable forests from the soldiers until finally the United States, recognizing their United States, recognizing their claim, allowed them a reservation among the mountains they loved so well, where their descendants, with the old patriarch, Kohleeostay, still in their midst, are living to this day.

Kohleeostay, who boasts of the purest Indian blood, scorns the whites, and has always refused to live with them or learn their langnage. He cherishes an intense admiration for Andrew Jackson, however, under whom he once fought in an expedition gainst the Creek Indians of Georgia-a service for which, he claims, the United States promised to pay him but never did. And that makes one more grievance the old man has against his paleface neighbors.
