Progressive Laws Passed in Texas

Austin Tex.—The special session of the Texas Legislature, exemplified, in a striking way, the progressive trend of the times. Whereas, two or three years ago, woman suffrage, for example, could muster only a few protesting votes, both houses at this session passed by an overwhelming majority, the bill providing for equal suffrage in primary elections. General elections were not included, merely to avoid any question of constitutionality.

In the same way, election reforms which had long been demanded in vain, and state-wide prohibition which had been postponed from year to year in spite of large dry majorities in both houses, were written into the law.

Majority nominations were provided for, and a second or run-off primary will be held following the regular biennial primary in July of the even-numbered years. A literary bill aimed at the Mexican vote in the border counties, and a bill providing that foreigners may vote only when fully naturalized, were written into the statutes.

Not the least of the accomplishments of the present session was its ratification of the national prohibition amendment making Texas the eighth State to take favorable action on this measure.

The special session was called by Governor Hobby primarily to enact war legislation. Before passing the state-wide prohibition bill, the Legislature passed a 10 mile zone law, excluding liquor from the vicinity of army camps and shipyards. It passed stringent legislation against bootlegging and vice. It passed measures in the interest of larger food production, and for the assistance especially of the farmers and stockraisers in the districts which have been dry the past two seasons. It authorized the State Treasurer to invest $5,000,000 of state funds in government short-time certificates. It amends the State Depository Law in the interest both of the State Treasury and business in general.

A bill providing for the relief of the overtaxed Supreme Court was passed as well as several other important measures growing out of the recent far-reaching investigation of the State's departments and institutions, carried on by committees of the Legislature.
