In The Recorder's Court

Judge Leavelly continues his practice of giving out sentences to defendants charged with being drunk and lightening up on them when they are willing to inform the police department the source of their spirits. John Mitchell, colored, will not be required to serve his 30 day road sentence if he satisfies the Chief Police who furnished him his liquor on which he got drunk. Elwood Hads drew a like sentence for being drunk.

Jim Hawkins was sentenced to eight months on the roads for selling liquor. He appealed and gave bond of $500.

Matt Dixon plead guilty and also innocence of the law against parking near a fire hydrant and paid the cost.

Some would say that perhaps Law Brown was justified to a certain degree when he went wild last Saturday night and was caught drinking and driving his car, with a pistol in his pocket. Brown says that his wife ran off with another fellow Saturday night and it so infuriated him that he tanked up to make him more nery then got his pistol and proceeded to make a search for the pair. In the meantime the officers caught him while he was on the war path. The court required him to pay $100 and the cost in three cases.

A. S. Thomas was fined $50 and the cost for violating the prohibition law.

Ernest White paid the cost for selling liquor. The case developed when White went in partnership with a friend and secured a quart for their use jointly. White made the purchase and then fulfilled his contract with his friend by delivering to him his just part of the goods.

Bessie Bowman once resident of Monkey Bottom, was convicted of selling liquor and given 12 months in jail. Appeal was taken and bond of $500 furnished. Moir Bowman paid the cost for his part in a liquor transaction.

Jim White, a young white boy, was before the court charged with stealing chickens from his neighbors. He was placed under a suspended sentence and required to go to work and pay over to his mother three dollars every Saturday night.

The following colored men were fined amounts ranging from $10 to $25 for gambling: Eugene Akera, Buck Flippin, Ed Staples, Henry Gal-laway and Ed Freeman.

Mill Knitting Goes

Back to Year 1830

It was in Cohoes, N. Y., in 1830 that the first knitting mill in the United States was established, according to a research just completed by Textiles, which shows that in that year Robert Roberts and Joshua Bailey began the manufacture of knitted underwear with two machines.

Years of study and experimentation were spent before machinery was invented that was practical for knitting, and it took more years before the public could be induced to discard its old wools or "red flannel" underwear and accept the newfangled knitted garments.

In a tiny wooden shack the two pioneers set up their two primitive knitting machines and went to work. They had no assistants, either to operate the machines or to sell and distribute the finished knit goods. After spending the day at their machines they would start out with their wools bundled into a little handcart, peddling from door to door, since they could find no retail storekeeper who was willing to take the risk of stocking up with any knitted garments.

The building in which the two pioneers established their mill has long since been demolished to make room for a more modern structure and there is no trace of the actual machinery used. It is interesting to note, however, that from its small beginning as the site of America's first knitting mill Cohoes has grown to be one of the principal centers of production of knitted underwear and outerwear in the country. More than twenty of the leading underwear knitting companies operate plants there, turning out thousands of dozens of garments daily.

New "Scaffolds" Grow

No baby was ever born a scaffold, says the Evansville Journal and Courier. The attitude of the child toward the father is a matter that is up to the daddy. The paternal parent's mistake usually lies in the fact that he puts off getting a line on the baby until it is too late.

The time to establish diplomatic and disciplinary relations with the baby is when the little one for the first time sits upright among pillows in the new high chair to take part in the initial family circle dinner. If baby gets away from the forces of law and order on the first venture into society, woe be unto that house and unto negligent, erring and careless parents!

The cute and cunning baby hand that so cleverly grabs the butter, will grow to maturity with a turn for grabbing everything in sight, and it is not such a far cry from the high chair buttersnatcher to the ruthless and selfish squatter on public oil land.

Self-control, orderly conduct and law observations in the high chair is the best foundation for self restraint, fairness, public and community spirit and business decency in the swivel chair. The father who fails to understand the business of being a parent, and who neglects personally to see to the proper laying of the foundation of character while the baby is in its beginnings, may come to know what a scaffold is, and how bitter are the trials of a parent scorned.

Wagner's Gondolier

Two score years later than his one-time master, Signor Ganasetto, the favorite gondolier of Richard Wagner, has made his last trip and passed away at the age of eighty-two. After he had served Wagner for many years during the latter's visits to Venice, Ganasetto had the honor of having his portrait painted by Jankowsky, an artist friend of the composer, at the latter's request. On Christmas eve, 1882, the last seen by Wagner, the gondolier was one of the guests at the Wagner festivities. Later in the evening he rowed his boat to the Teatro Venice, where the master conducted Mozart's "Magic Flute."

In February, 1883, Wagner, accompanied by his wife, Cosima, took his last trip through the canals of Venice. He asked to be rowed to the St. Michele cemetery. There he was seized by a fainting spell. Hurried home, he recovered consciousness, but six days later died. Ganasetto rowed the remains of his master to the railroad station, where they were put on a train for Germany.

Who Was It?

A Detroit driver driving through northern New York state at night, not long ago, was stopped by a sheriff in a small town and asked if he had seen anyone walking along the road or if he had been asked for a "lift." Replying in the negative, he was told that a convict had escaped from the penitentiary in Auburn. He again started out into the almost impenetrable darkness and had progressed a couple of miles when suddenly from the side of the road darted an unshaven, roughly clothed man, waving his arms frantically and shouting at the Detroit driver. The motorist did what almost anyone else would have done. He "stepped on it" and shot by the stranger. "And I've been wondering ever since who he was and what he wanted," he concluded, in telling the story. "I almost wish I had taken a chance and stopped."—Detroit News.

Farming in Ireland

Of the 3,105,000 population of the Irish Free State about 2,000,000 are engaged in agriculture. There are 354,484 agricultural holdings. The area under crops in 1923 was less by 98,074 acres than in 1922, though greater by 13,000 acres than in pre-war years. There is a decline in the number of sheep, but a big increase in the number of pigs.

Whose Judgment May Be Trusted to Manage Your Property?

Before you make this important choice you owe it to yourself, and to those whom you wish to benefit, to compare the admittedly superior advantages offered by a good bank possessing the qualifications of any individual you might select to act as your executor and trustee. Many people have an impression that the expert administration of an estate by a big organization like the Bank of Mount Airy costs more than the services of an individual trustee. Let us begin, therefore with the fact that these fees are established by law; that they are the same whether an institution of trust acts as your executor or an individual, and that they are exceedingly moderate in North Carolina, being based on the amount of principal and income received and paid out. Moreover the total final charges against an estate are usually less when a bank serves as executor and trustee.
