STATES MUST STUDY DANGERS OF TRAFFIC

Should Learn How, Why and Where Automobile Accidents Occur, Declares Franklin.

Syracuse, N. Y., Dec. 6.—The most direct way to achieve traffic safety is through scientific study of the causes of street and highways accidents by state governments," says H. M. Franklin, president of the Franklin Automobile company.

"For the most part the present day regulation is directed at speed. It is already apparent that this is not the ultimate answer. Therefore, it would seem to be the first duty of the state to make an analysis of automobile accidents of all kinds, to determine how they happen, why and where, and thus obtain information by which to direct preventive efforts.

"The present high standard of industrial safety came about when State Governments began to classify the causes of accidents," Mr. Franklin points out. "It is notable that the really effective safety methods in industry some that never would have been thought of if this scientific study had not been made.

"Similarly, I anticipate the constant process of investigation to lead to legislation, having as its object, speed with safety. Ignore the speed element in automobile travel and our transportation will slide back to the standard of the '80's and '90's.

"Such research might lead to a marked change in the policies of state highway engineers, such as a constant aim to eliminate the kind of road curves and blind crossings which pile up the motor car fatalities to appalling proportions. Solution of the parking problem on state thoroughfares and better provision for pedestrians both on highways and city streets, are possibilities also."

The Autoist's Prayer

Lord you'll please excuse me from worship or service today— your day I know—but it's the only one I have for rest or play. And so I'd like to spin at 20, 30 40 miles an hour through a couple hundred miles of your fair footstool. So please don't let it rain. And I trust you'll not count the same a sin. The worship and the praise and song, I'll leave to those whom you have not blessed with worldly goods, to the extent that they can even afford—a flivver. I trust you will accept my loyalty to Thee upon my word. You know I'd like to give to charity or church at home and church abroad, but at the present price of gas and oil, great-guns, it takes the product of my toll to keep the bus a-rolling, so that out upon the road I need not take from ungodly scorchers' gibes and dust.

I send the kids to Sunday school to learn the way to heaven, while I grease her up so that she may be driven, slip no pins, or break an "ax" and send us prematurely to that same heaven.

You know how it is I can't appear at church, or even have time to read the Word, inspired by one that in less fortunate days I called my Lord. After six days' rush in office or in store, the seventh I need to rush a little more. To do it at a pace, that makes me feel I'm a live one, and hold up my face, I have to pump the tires and all the cups fill with grease.

From my duty to my car, I've taken time for this, my prayer, to show that my early training is not forgotten, that on Sabbath to God we should have a thought.

Keep us from turning turtle in some ditch, or by some drunken joyrider (I'll vote dry next time) being smashed, and some day when I get rich enough to own two cars, I'll let my chauffeur have one to take the poor to church.

And will you overlook some minor sins of mine, and pardon my hogging all my-you time, which you in your good providence have given and will some day—not now, I'm awful busy—take me to your heaven. Up there I trust you'll furnish me a proper car, that needs no oil or gas or tinkering, to ride the golden streets. Till then, please bear in mind, I'm rushed to death with living—The Autoist.

P. S.—My excuses may not seem so strong, but I spend thy day this way, to please my children and my wife, who had such a dull life when I'm away, so please charge them their share, if it is wrong.—Exchange.

The Oil Well that Pumped Beer!

ONCE an Oil well was started atop a hill. Suddenly the tools dropped eight feet; that meant a crevice. And such a crevice would mean a veritable lake of Oil! The driller hauled up the tools. They were dripping amber fluid. It looked like beer! It smelled like beer; it tasted like beer; it was beer! The amazing tidings spread like wildfire, and bucket after bucket of delicious beer was drawn up. The owners of the well started figuring their profits from a lake of beer! Pumping was about to begin, hastened by a gathering of shrewd, impatient spectators, when a German, puffing and wheezing, rushed up the hill. "Gott in himmel!" was all he had breath to scream. Investigation disclosed that the well had been drilled directly over the tunnel which Philip Grossman, the local brewer, had dug into the hillside to keep his beer cool. The drill had pierced the head of a beer run in the tunnel! So the boghead was pushed aside and in two weeks the well was pumping thirty barrels a day of heavy Oil.

A well that pumped beer would be a delightful curiosity. But if every Oil well were to stop pumping Oil, and pump beer instead, not only would there be more beer than could possibly be used—but all of us would be deprived of the blessings of The Red C Oil and The White C Oil, same except in color, the truly fine Kerosene for your Lamps, Stoves and Incubators.
