Hill Streams Get Dry As Drought Continues

Eastern Carolina and some parts of the central portion had good rains during the past week, but most of the central and all the western sections continue to suffer acutely from the drought, according to the weekly weather survey by L. A. Denson, state meteorologist of Raleigh. The survey follows:

"There were good rains toward the close of the week in the eastern and parts of the central portion of the state, but only a few light scattered showers elsewhere. Drought is severe in most of the western and some central localities, being the worst in many years over a large part of the mountain region and a considerable distance to the eastward. Western streams are very low and the water supply is unusually short in many localities. Practically all crops are deteriorating in the western half of the state, except some lowland corn and cotton though small in holding fairly well over a portion of that section.

"On the other hand crops have made fine progress and are in good to excellent condition in nearly all of the coastal plain and most of the eastern portion of the central district. Corn and tobacco are greatly in need of rain in parts of the central district but other parts of this portion of the state had good rains toward the close of the week. Fruits are rather small on account of dry weather; shipments of peaches are becoming heavy. Vegetables and melons are plentiful in the eastern section."

Here's Occasion When It Really Was Cold

A Connecticut correspondent writes us: Reading in the Companion recently of a Vermont who invented a flying machine with which he flew from the top of a high mountain and landed on a rock with such force that he drove his feet into the ledge clear up to his hips and again a little later of a Westerner who sawed a sleeping gray squirrel in two one winter's day without waking him reminds me of a story told by my grandfather. He lived in a very bleak corner of Connecticut in the early days when fireplaces were the only means of heating. It seemed impossible for him to warm the house. At last he became desperate, and, going into the cellar where there was a large fireplace, he packed it full with several cords of good hard wood, set it all afire and then went upstairs to bed.

The next morning he got up early, hoping to find the house warm, but the rooms were as cold as ever; so he went out of doors to see if smoke were coming out of the chimney. To his amazement he saw the flames standing up out of the chimney four or five feet high, frozen solid!—Youth's Companion.

Twain Had Weakness for Southern Cooking

Mark Twain, in his Autobiography, pays tribute to Southern dishes, such as, for instance, corn bread, hot biscuits, wheat bread and fried chicken.

"These things," he says, "have never been properly cooked in the North—in fact, no one there is able to learn the art, so far as my experience goes. The North thinks it knows how to make corn bread, but this is mere superstition. Perhaps no bread in the world is quite so good as Southern corn bread and perhaps no bread in the world is quite so bad as the Northern imitation of it. The North seldom tries to fry chicken, and this is well; the art cannot be learned north of the line of Mason and Dixon, nor anywhere in Europe. This is not hearsay; it is experience that is speaking. In Europe it is imagined that the custom of serving various kinds of bread blanding hot is 'American,' but that is too broad a spread; it is custom in the South, but is much less than that in the North."

Wet Shoes

If you are caught in a rain and get your shoes wet do something to counteract the possible effects if you cannot get home to change your footwear. Business people who are caught this way know how uncomfortable it is to go around in damp shoes and many of them know something about the evil effects that often result.

It is a simple matter to lay a few blotters on top of each other and stand on them a few minutes. You will be surprised how much dampness the blotters will absorb. Even if you are on a shopping tour you can purchase blotters and take this precaution.

If the shoes have become very wet or thoroughly soaked, place a blotter between the stocking and shoe for a few minutes. This is a safety-first suggestion that may avert a cold or more serious illness.

Why Mr. Norwood Won't Back-Stand the Suit

A young lawyer at Paces, Virginia, has instituted a suit in Federal court asking the appointment of a receiver for the Tobacco Growers Cooperative Association. He wrote a letter, which was published, asking President George A. Norwood of the association for resources with which to prosecute the suit.

HERE'S MR. NORWOOD'S REPLY

"I desire to say very frankly to you that I have had the opportunity to observe your activities against the association prior to the institution of this suit. I cannot convince myself that you are acting for the benefit of the association. I can only conclude that you are desirous of destroying it. You have stated to the Executive Committee of the association, in my presence, that you were not a member of the association, although you were eligible for membership. I cannot comprehend how a man who has refused to join this association and who has, since its organization, sold his tobacco at auction can be the 'disinterested friend' you claim to be.

"I would remind you further that upon one occasion when you appeared before the Executive Committee * * * you confessed that you had approached certain members of the association and sought employment with the promise to them that your services would cost them nothing.

"With these things in mind I cannot believe that the motives which actuate you now are different from the motives which actuated you then. I, therefore, cannot advise the board to lend you any assistance as a friend of this association."
