Small Tribe Resists Domination of Russia

Though technically a part of the old Russian empire under the rule of the czar, the Russians in reality never conquered Svantia, which has been occupied by an isolated mountain tribe occupying a small area in the heart of the Caucasus mountains. The Svantian state, supposed to have been founded nearly 4,000 years ago, has been a republic ever since, making it the oldest republic in the world. In 1921, when the Communists extended their power along the Black sea, they decided to attempt to conquer Svantia. The Svans sent a delegation down to warn the troops that it would be vain for them to try to break through the mountain barrier. The Russian captain refused to take heed. He went through southern Svantia without trouble. With his battalion of 400 men marching single file along the trail he came to the almost pathless route on the cliffs overhanging the River Inga, and there was trapped. Forty Svans, grouped on the opposite bank of the river, shot down the 400 Russian troops. Later, however, the Russians entered Svantia by using machine guns, but it was an empty victory for them, because the Svans never have yielded to outside dictation.—Asia Magazine.

Not All Can Worthily Wear "Elijah's Mantle"

History is full of instances of men of whom it has been said: "The mantle of Elijah descended upon him." It means that he was a worthy successor of some still more famous master. For instance, Pitt the Younger worthily succeeded to the mantle of his father, the famous earl of Chatham. On the other hand, Richard Cromwell quite failed to wear the mantle of his father, the mighty Oliver. The phrase is obviously Biblical. When Elijah the prophet went up "by a whirlwind into heaven," the mantle with which he had divided the waters of the River Jordan fell from his shoulders. Elisha, his servant and successor, picked up the fallen cloak, for it seemed to him that it would serve to prove whether he was a true successor or not. The story goes on: "He took the mantle of Elijah which fell from him, and smote the waters . . . and they parted hither and thither; and Elisha went over. And when the sons of the prophets . . . saw him, they said, The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha."

Women Not "Weaker Sex"

While the race always has regarded man as the stronger of the species he's actually woman's superior only where tests of physical power are concerned. In actual vitality and resistance to disease woman is his superior, says Dr. Harvey W. Wiley in Good Housekeeping Magazine. "Most people think that women as a rule are more prone to disease, less resistant to suffering and quicker to give way to bad health," he says, "but statistics do not support this idea. Women's average life is two years longer than men's. They go through pangs of childbirth which men could not withstand. They give their vitality to the welfare and upbringing of their children," and still do a share of the world's work that matches man's, he points out.

Driven to Profanity

General Thomas was a Methodist to his heart's core, and as such he was offended by all ungodliness. He did not hold with those who used profanity, and it was difficult for him to endure it in patience. Yet once, when he led his cold and ragged troops through a desolate country, the men in ranks took up a rather plaintive song, whose refrain was "When this cruel war is over!" The whining, mawkish syllables roused the general's ire. He turned in his saddle, shouting: "Stop that d--n song! How in h--l do you expect to win a war when that is your opinion of it?" The ranks were silent, obediently so, and their leader resumed his reflections.—Portland Oregonian.

Treating Ferns

Once a week set the fern in a pan of lukewarm water overnight instead of watering it. Ferns should be kept moist but not soggy. Give a fern a bi-monthly dose of castor oil. Drop a teaspoonful of the oil into the soil near the root. Once in two or three weeks add ammonia to the water—one teaspoonful to one quart of water. This will prevent the plant from getting warmer. To remove insects from the leaves use soap (some gardeners prefer naphtha soap) and lukewarm water and spray the plant well. Pull out the "suckers" as they appear if you desire a thrifty plant.

Source of Information

At a festival dinner of the Royal society it fell to Professor Huxley's lot to present the Royal medal to Gunther, in acknowledgment of his ichthyological researches. He did so in these terms: "When I am asked to dine at the tables of the great, as I occasionally am, it invariably happens that when the second course is reached the lady whom I have taken in to dinner turns to me and asks, 'Professor Huxley, what is the nature of whitebait?' To which I invariably reply, 'I really don't know, but if you will study Gunther's book on fishes in four quarto volumes, perhaps you will find out.'"

When Philip of Spain Hooded God's Command

We all know that there is a right way and a wrong way to interpret the words of another. I know no better illustration than that brought to bear upon Philip II of Spain in the sixteenth century to prevent him from supporting the efforts of certain Spanish princes to dig a canal across the Isthmus of Panama. William N. Brinsmead tells us, in the Independent. This ambitious project met with ill favor from certain Spanish merchants who feared that a canal would destroy their cherished monopoly upon Spanish colonial trade. So, knowing that good King Philip was a devout Christian, they adduced Biblical proof which satisfied him that the construction of such a canal would be in violation of the direct command of God. He accepted their proof, issued an edict and put an end to the sacrilegious canal-building plans of his followers. You may well ask what was the amazing proof submitted to Philip which led him to believe that the Almighty forbade such an apparently rational project as a mere canal. The answer may be surprising. The command of God was found in that well-known Biblical verse, which Philip was told applied to continents as well as man: "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder."

No Question Animals Enjoy Playing Games

That animals play games seems borne out by most people's observations. It is a common thing, for instance, to see a cat and dog, brought up together, playing hide and seek. There is a game which can often be seen played by dogs on any open space where they foregather on fine mornings. Children play it, too. In the south of England they call it "Ho," and in other parts "Touch" and "Tig." This is the game in which the one touched has in turn to touch another, and so on. No one can watch lambs in a hilly field for any length of time without concluding that they are playing a game. One takes its stand on a hillock and the others charge for it and take possession. They keep this up in turns for hours. It is a sort of "King of the Castle" game. Most young animals are fond of playing tug of war. A litter of puppies will play it for hours with a length of rope or an old duster. Otters play at shooting the chute. They have a sort of toboggan slide on the bank of a stream and play follow-my-leader round and round, climbing the bank in rotation and sliding back into the water.

But It Stayed in Family

A story is current describing the only sale of real estate John Jacob Astor is thought to have made. He had just watched the completion of his Astor house, about 1890. Next day, he brought his eldest son William down to see it. "Father, that's a fine building," said William. "I wish it was mine." "So," smiled the father. "Well, give me a dollar and you can have it." According to the story, the dollar was produced, and the two repaired to a lawyer's to prepare the deed.

Training Teachers

The first genuine effort for the professional training of teachers undertaken in the world was undoubtedly by Jean Baptiste de la Salle at Helms in 1681. At the beginning of the Nineteenth century the development of institutions to train teachers took on a new life and the Prussian system of normal schools was firmly established. Six normal schools had been organized in that country. It was about this time that the subject of preparing teachers for public schools began to receive attention in America.

Blindness No Handicap

In spite of total blindness caused by a gun accident, Henry Fawcett rose to high positions in British public life. He was born in Salisbury in 1833. At the age of thirty-two he entered the house of commons where his ability and devotion to worthy causes soon made him a prominent and influential member. In 1880 he became postmaster general in the government of Mr. Gladstone, and during his term of office he brought about many improvements in the postal service. He died in 1884.

Too Much Politeness

Men are very generally spoiled by being so civil and well disposed. You can have no profitable conversation with them—they are so conciliatory; determined to agree with you. They exhibit such long suffering and kindness in a short interview. I would meet with some provoking strangeness; so that we may be guest and host and refresh one another. It is possible for a man wholly to disappear, and be merged in his manners.—Thornton.

Thackeray's Satire

"Yellow Flush Papers" were written in 1837 by William Makepeace Thackeray, the well-known English novelist, and contemporary of Charles Dickens. The papers form a playful satire on snobism, whether it be the snobism of the wealthy or that of the servants. The papers first appeared in a magazine, but in 1843 they were published in book form under the title of "Comic Tales and Sketches."
