FRIDAY EVENING, JANUARY 29, 1915

The vote for the repeal of the Justice long and short haul provision was almost unanimous. Only the votes of two "Williams," both Republicans, were adversely recorded. It was in all probability more the result of habit in voting against the majority as a matter of course rather than any great desire to see the statute remain in effect.

Two heads are generally better than one. The application of the principle in the matter of providing a safe and adequate system of governing Kinston would, The Free Press believes, be exceedingly wise. A committee of citizens could fittingly represent one head and the Council committee the other. Why not try it? All to be gained and nothing to be lost.

There are a few hardy flies which survive the rigorous winter weather and await the coming of the first signs of spring to begin multiplying their offspring for the campaign of the Spring, Summer and Fall in the spread of disease. The elimination of the nesting places—the accumulated unscreened manure piles in the horse and mule stables—now will do much to destroy the crop of 1915. The city fathers can make provision for such elimination. The February meeting is the opportune time. Will the Council rise to the occasion?

London says the flagship of Admiral Beatty was disabled in Sunday's engagement with the Germans and had to be towed into port. This claim is substantiated by the printed report of Admiral Beatty. Berlin still contends that the Germans sunk three English ships. This report comes from German airmen and not from the naval branch, which from all reports, were in too big a hurry to pause long enough to take stock of the damage done by their stern batteries. The fellow who was on the "ground" ought to know better about what happened, and the British claim will be generally accepted until more evidence than the Lion or other ships, known to have taken part in the engagement, are missing is produced.

LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE FAVORABLY IMPRESSED

That the Legislative Investigating Committee, composed of six senators and four representatives, which visited the School for the Feeble-Minded Thursday afternoon were favorably impressed, was evident to the large number of Kinstonians who were at Hines' Junction with Dr. McNairy to greet the gentlemen and assist in their entertainment while inspecting the school property. Some of the visiting gentlemen came to the school with considerable doubt in their minds as to the wisdom of the undertaking. They saw a sight which could not but dispel their doubt and cause them to realize not only the need of maintaining the present inadequate plant, but the greater need of a larger institution. The various workshops, which have been housed in temporary frame buildings and some in old tenant houses, impressed the committee. They said that no other institution in the State was making use of such buildings. They were impressed with the interest of Kinston in the institution and Senator Johnson of Duplin, who championed the bill for the school in the Legislature when the institution was made possible, remarked that in all his legislative experience he had not come in contact with such a manifestation of local pride and interest. He expressed the opinion that the Lenoir institution was destined to become the most important of its character in the State. Senator Haymore of Surry, who was one of the "skeptics" before his arrival, was sorry that more time was not allotted for the inspection. He was outspokenly impressed. The exercises of the children under the direction of their capable principal Miss Sallie Shaw, and assistants, caused the members of the committee to literally stand up and take notice with open mouthed astonishment at the possibilities of development evidenced. Senator Cooper of New Hanover said that if only the full committee could witness what they, who came had witnessed, there would be little doubt that the school would be taken care of in the matter of adequate appropriation.

The Free Press believes it expresses the sentiment of all Kinstonians when it declares that it is glad that these intelligent, open-minded gentlemen came and it feels safe in predicting that the School for the Feeble-Minded will, if their influence prevails, get just consideration in the matter of appropriations.

KINSTON'S RESPONSIBILITY TO ITS YOUNG MEN

Kinston needs a rendezvous for young men. A place where they can assemble, read good, clean literature and enjoy innocent amusements in a wholesome atmosphere. The "street corner habit" is bad. Not only in Kinston, but wherever it is fostered. The development of this custom is quite frequently in a negative way, as it is in Kinston. There is no alternative; no place of gathering afforded, but the curb-stones and available shop windows. In some larger places there are plenty of opportunity for whiling away the time in good environment, and still there are those who prefer the street corners, public pool rooms and other loafing places, which are not conducive to character uplift. This would probably be the case here, but The Free Press believes Kinston should lay the plans for a Young Men's Christian Association Building. A branch of this non-denominational, world-encircling agency for looking after the welfare of the young men would add greatly to the truly vital assets of this community, as it has done wherever the work has been established. The young man away from home, who carries a membership card in the Y. M. C. A. is glad to see the welcome sign that hangs out to him in every other place, where there is an association. He knows that there await him no pitfalls or dangers when he accepts of the hospitality of the Y. M. C. A. The Chamber of Commerce would do well to consider the inauguration of this movement. Temporary quarters could be gotten and a little later some of the international workers of the Y. M. C. A. organization would be glad to come here and organize a four or five day whirlwind campaign for a building. The erection of such is well within the bounds of Kinston's responsibility to her young men.

WHISKEYTES' "LAST STRAW" METHOD UNAVAILING

From the Wilmington Dispatch's article on the Alabama prohibition fight it is clear that the full story of the situation in Alabama is not known to our esteemed contemporary. The Dispatch endorses the proposition that Governor Henderson made to the Legislature, which passed, over his veto by an overwhelming vote, the state wide measure to go into effect after June 30 next. The Birmingham News and the Montgomery Advertiser, the State's most largely read papers, and virtually under the same control, violently opposed the prohibition measure and, finding out that they were whipped, made the proposition that the issue be submitted to the people for a referendum vote, at the same time claiming that the legislators were not acting in good faith as prohibition had not entered into the fight. In this they were grossly in error. Not only was prohibition an issue, but The Birmingham News championed a slate of so-called local optionists from its home county, which the people repudiated. The whiskey issue was in evidence all over the State, and the Legislature is composed of a more than three-fourths dry majority. Men, too, whose positions on the question were well known to their constituents. Mr. Henderson, the Governor, was the local option candidate and was nominated in a run-off primary with ex-Governor Comer, whose administration eight years ago was radical to the extreme, and although the reforms that were instituted during his term, are of everlasting benefit to the State, his fight against capital in his successful effort to break the shackles of corporate corruption in the matter of State government control, had the effect of driving much of the investments, that would have been placed in the State, elsewhere. Consequently Mr. Comer's administration became very unpopular. In the recent election, he lead the ticket in the first primary, in which there were four or five candidates, but in the run-off Mr. Henderson, who is very popular, had a walkaway. The personal equation entered more largely into Mr. Henderson's selection therefore than did the issue. The people of Alabama are in favor of banishing liquor and they instructed their representatives accordingly. The "last straw" efforts of the two papers and Governor Henderson notwithstanding.

WHAT OTHERS SAY

NOT A REFUGE FOR BLEASE BENEFICIARIES.

Wilmington Dispatch: "The conviction of 'Portland Ned' in Raleigh demonstrates that while those convicts pardoned by Blease may understand that South Carolina is no longer a healthful place, under the rule of a new Governor, that notwithstanding they can't abide in North Carolina.

HOG AND HOMINY TALK

Winston-Salem Sentinel: "Now that a great deal is being said about the desirability of crop diversification in this section, the figures given out by the State Department of Agriculture relative to the amount of corn used in this State, and the source of this supply, furnish considerable food for thought. They show that thousands of bushels of corn used in North Carolina that might be produced here are bought in other States. And the same is true of a number of other products.

VOX POPULI

To Editor of The Free Press: Yesterday's editorial in Free Press with reference to children begging upon streets apparently in violation of both the law against begging and the compulsory school attendance law, deserves our serious thought. What kind of compulsory attendance law have we? Does it not require attendance of children between 8 and 12? I know that some of those spoken of in the editorial are between eight and twelve. Why are they allowed out of school? Why do not we here as in some other cities: have the superintendent of schools report each day to the police department all unexcused absences of children under the compulsory law and let the police go to the home and investigate. If parents are to blame make a case against them. Some make excuse of no clothes and no books. Where these excuses are genuine and parents can't provide clothes and books, the city should furnish both. Some may say "The expense would be too great." Very few parents would be willing to throw the burden upon the city and the cost would be much less than would be generally supposed. Then I am sure that by co-operative effort, many books already used would be donated each year for this purpose. But even at maximum cost, the provision would be wise for the city's children are of more value than her dollars. BERNARD P. SMITH.
