POET, PLAYWRIGHT, BURGLAR, AUTHOR, DREAMED ROMANCE

(By the United Press) San Francisco, Jan. 7 .- Poet, playwright, and author by day; burglar by night-that's how Frederick Glanz describes himself. Upon a lot of hard-hearted editors he blames the combination. He didn't have the nerve to face the blue pencil, after several rejections, but he had the nerve to turn burglar.

"I dreamed of romance," he said, "but none came my way. I found my ster had overpowered me; I had been hotel clerk, gardener, bum; then I was a burglar. I hated to do it at first, but it didn't seem so bad after I'd done my 'jolt' in the San Quentin 'pen' ." Now he faces the prospect of another term. This is what he writes of Freedom-

"For Freedom's song is better sung, when prairie and mountain surround:

'Tis a theme comes tardily from the age, in cities, where wrongs abound."
