HEALTH
Can the State Not Afford It?
 A letter to the State Board of Health recently told the story of a man, a father of a family of seven, who is sick with tuberculosis and who is without means for defraying the expenses of care and treatment.
 He has a wife and six children, and altogether they are living according to views of half a century ago, particularly as regards tuberculosis.
 That is, they do not know that tuberculosis is a germ disease, that it is contagious, and that it is spread through the sputum. They do not know that consumption is not inherited, but contracted, and that it is both preventable and curable. So, according to past experiences with this disease, one by one, all the family will become victims of dread consumption which they did not inherit but contracted from the father.
 And yet this is not all of the story.
 This household is a source of infection to the neighborhood and the whole community. Neighbors visit, and friends and relatives come and stay to render whatever assistance they may to the sick man. They are conscious of their duty to the sick, but not of the danger to which they are subjecting themselves.

What is to be done about it? Can the county of which this sick man is a citizen afford to let him remain in this condition with no effort to help him or protect his family and the people of the community from the same disease? Can the State afford to withhold the small sum of a dollar a day for treatment at the State Sanatorium which would not only give the sick man the care he needs but would give his family through him the instruction and protection they need regarding the disease?

Neither the State nor the county can afford from an economic standpoint alone not to care for this man and protect him as a dangerous citizen. Whatever this one case would cost the State now, in a few years seven cases of tuberculosis, or in a few years seven times seven cases would cost the State a staggering sum. Can it afford it?

BRIEFS IN THE NEWS
FROM OTHER COUNTIES

James F. Wrenn, a road contractor, has advised the Beaufort county commissioners not to build sand clay roads. "You should take a lesson from Craven county," he told them.
 The "Masked Marvel," downed by Max Smith at New Bern, unmasked and revealed himself to be Young Sandow, the noted New York professional wrestler.

Craven county farmers are to raise more pork this year, says a New Bern report.
