SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 28, 1916

Now for business after four days of exceedingly pleasant demoralization.

The Fair is past. Next comes the circus, but, after all life is one thing after another.

If you haven't already registered and don't do so before the sun goes down today, you have disfranchised yourself in this all important year.

Oh, Joy! We have discovered a paper drummer who actually thinks that within the course of a few months the price of print paper will take a tumble.

A contemporary advises that the consumers are beginning to be reconciled to the increased prices of bread. We would like to know what alternative they have if they don't become reconciled; but, then, it might be said that there is a good deal in habit, and all prices are doing it—increasing.

A man in Salisbury is under indictment and heavy bond to appear for trial on the charge of having caused the death of another man by driving over him in an automobile while the driver was in an intoxicated condition. Men who are known to be addicted to drinking even in moderation should be denied the privilege of driving automobiles on public thoroughfares, for it is a menace to life and limb of everybody with whom they come in contact.

The handling of the large crowds that visited Kinston during the four days of the Fair has been in a most satisfactory and successful way. The traffic squad, working under Chief Skinner, although practically all of them were inexperienced men employed for the week, has done splendid work and no serious accident has occurred. When it is taken into consideration that more than a hundred public and several hundred private cars were in a continual stream to and from the Fair grounds, almost half of the distance traversed going and coming on a single stretch of the highway, it is truly remarkable that no serious casualties occurred. The Free Press is glad to direct the public's attention to the good work of the police department.

There is every indication of a Wilson success but, nevertheless, as The Free Press has cautioned before, the Democratic forces should not let up one whit in their aggressive campaign of education that the public may not be subjected to any misleading statement of seekers for office. Mr. Wilson's victory should be declared by an overwhelming majority. A simple majority is not sufficient endorsement of the great achievements of the Wilson administration. It must assume the proportions of a landslide, for nothing short of such proportions would be commensurate with the accomplishments of the past four years. Let every lover of peace and prosperity bend his best efforts to piling up a huge majority for Woodrow Wilson on November 7.

Democratic leaders are confident that the outcome of the election on November 7 will be entirely satisfactory. They have every reason now to believe that the American people will retain in the White House a man who has so ably led this country through trial and tribulation, and who has surmounted obstacles, the like of which have not before been presented to any chief executive. Not only will Mr. Wilson get the support of his party and a great number of the independent voters, but many of the heretofore leaders of the Republican and Progressive factions will cast their ballot for Mr. Wilson and, be it said to their credit, such are men who think for themselves and who are courageous enough to support their convictions by casting their ballot without regard for party lines.

THE KINSTON FAIR MAKES GOOD.

Those who attended the Kinston Fair both in its initial year and its exhibition just closing could not help but be impressed by the marked improvement that was manifest in every exhibit. The transformation has been truly remarkable, and is the best kind of evidence that the Fair is serving the purpose of its originators: the stimulating of better work in every line of activity and production in this section.

The agricultural exhibits were particularly creditable. The live stock showed an improvement which was manifest to the most casual observer and such could be said about practically every exhibit.

The educational exhibit was particularly interesting, and the community idea carried out indicated a step forward in the progressiveness of this section. In the educational department the display of work done by the children of the Caswell Training School compared most favorably with any of the other exhibits. The needlework and the exhibits of the manual training department are worthy of special notice.

That the Fair is performing well its function is patent to all who took occasion to study carefully the progress of the past twelve months as indicated by comparison of the two exhibits. The Kinston Fair has a splendid part to play in the growth and upbuilding of this community, and that it will prove a forceful factor in the development of the section's resources has already been proven.

WHAT OTHERS SAY

MAY YOU SUCCEED THIS YEAR.

New Bern Sun-Journal: "The management of the Kinston Fair has made an announcement to the effect that they made money this year, and that all their expectations were more than surpassed. We rejoice with them over this fact. It has been our misfortune to be on the other side of the fence with our fairs of recent years, and it is not a pleasant feeling by any means. This year we hope to come out on top and with the assistance of the people in this section we are going to do this."

"WE MUST RECRUIT VOTES OF FORWARD-LOOKING MEN"

resources upon some sensible plan of use and conservation. We must recruit the votes of forward-looking men by the votes of women so that we may have a fresh insight in all matters of social reform and move more certainly and more promptly in the solution of the many new problems of society with which the law must henceforth deal. We must unite the Americas, North and South, in a new sympathy and co-operation. We must seek justice and the right through every channel that offers; and we must put America in all its force, in all its wealth, alike of physical power and spiritual enthusiasm, at the service of the other nations of the world when peace comes on the other side of the seas, to make that peace permanent by establishing it on the everlasting foundations of trust, co-operation, equality and justice. These things we must do and all else that may serve mankind. Co-operation the Big Thing. And our motto must be co-operation, the union, not the hostile rivalry, of the forces of society within the nation and within the family of nations. The interests of mankind can never again be served by aggression; the interest of no nation or group of nations can never again be served by aggression. The contests of jealousy are as bitter and as dangerous as the contests of arms. The world must henceforth seek the means of accommodation, not the means of arresting quarrels merely.

The nation we love and serve must be among the first and foremost of those that rise to the new ideals with spirit and well-directed force. Our own reforms, our own actions in the interest of justice and humanity must be the earnest of our spirit and purpose in the affairs of the world outside our own borders. "Such is the prospect, such is the program, my fellow-citizens, to which we look forward, to which it is our purpose to move forward with enthusiasm and irresistible ardor. We will not pause in the midst of our task. We know that we stand at one of the most critical junctures in the history of the world, when all hopes hang in the balance. We will suffer no man, no body of men, through timidity or fear or jealousy, to delay or hinder or embarrass us. Reaction can have no place of tolerance amongst us when all the world waits upon those who plan justice and progress. I summon you, not only to sustain, but to swell the hosts that have their faces now set toward the light, their eyes lifted to the horizon where the dawn of a new age begins to brighten; and I summon you with confidence, with a certain expectation of the part America and her great people are to play when the dawn broadens into day."

WINCHESTER

HAMMERLESS SHOTGUN MODEL 212
Five Light Weight

Made in 12, 16 and 20 Gauges
There's no need of carrying a heavy gun. The use of Nickel Steel makes it possible to get extreme light weight with great strength. But it costs more, and so is not generally used. Winchester Model 212 shot-guns are constructed entirely of nickel steel, which makes it the lightest and strongest gun on the market. It is very handsome besides, and a reliable, fine-shooting gun. Be sure to see one before buying. Sold by all dealers.
