	gold and silver varies as do the supply of gold and silver and the demand for them. Sometimes gold is cheaper, sometimes dearer; the same is true of silver. This "exchange value" changes as does the "exchange value" ef any other commodities—depending etern- ally upou the natural laws of supply and demand. If there were in existence but one single ounce of gold, and there were the same demand for gold as there is today, then that single ounce of gold would possess the same "exchange value" as does all of the gold on earth today. If there were twice as much gold on earth today as there is, and the demand for gold were the same as it is today, then two ounces of gold would possess only the "ex-	Mr. Gates, the Evangelist, is to take part in the services and his mother, wife and daughter arrived at the hotel yester- day.
