RAIN DRIVES MAN CRAZY.
Survivor of a Flood Goes Stark Mad on Every Wet Day.
The victim of a peculiarly recurring mania, in which he loses his reason whenever there is a rainstorm, Charles F. Rotterman, a miner, became unbalanced during the storm of last night, and held his wife prisoner until this morning in their apartments, when she managed to escape and notified the police. Rotterman is now in the hospital ward of the city jail stark mad.
When Patrolmen Keyt and McDonald entered the house to take charge of Rotterman, he threatened to cut their hearts out, and was overpowered only after a desperate struggle. When searched at police headquarters two knives were found upon his person.
Ten years ago Rotterman, then a miner in the Cripple Creek district, was caught in a flooded mine, and narrowly escaped drowning. Since that time the sight of water in any great volume has caused him to become mentally unbalanced. In the past three years the police have had to deal with him on nearly a dozen occasions. Once he jumped through a plate glass window, cutting himself badly, and at another time he threatened his wife and children.
In October, 1907 he disappeared from his home in this city, and when next heard from was confined in the city jail at Greeley under heavy guard. He had terrorized people all through the town by his actions. When his wife learned of his plight he had been adjudged insane in the county court of Weld county, and committed to the Pueblo Insane Asylum. Before time for his removal there, however, he regained his faculties, and his wife succeeded in securing his release. He returned to this city, and as far as the police know, the present spell is the first he has experienced since that time.
Rotterman is a man of excellent physique, and his affliction is pitiable. He is perfectly rational between spells and realize his falling, but is powerless to help himself. He will be placed in the insane ward of the county hospital until he recovers from his present attack.
