LARGE CITIES GIVING THE MOST TROUBLE

Mountain Sections and Small Towns Easier For Prohibition Agents to Handle.

"The greatest domestic task before the United States government at this moment is the efficient enforcement of the prohibition law," says John F. Kraer, federal prohibition commissioner, "and the remarkable feature of this task is the fact that in the rural mountain districts of the country where the internal revenue department has had to fight the illicit still, the enforcement of the Volstead act is far less difficult than in the towns and cities where the liquor smuggler and bootlegger have become rampant.

"It is far easier to enforce prohibition in the mountains and valleys of North Carolina and Tennessee, where men for three generations have made 'moonshine' liquor, than here in the country's capital, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Chicago, or New Orleans. There are two outstanding causes for this situation. There are 50,000,000 gallons of whiskey in 250 bonded warehouses in the United States. There is no way in which to provide prompt court trials for violators of the law in these States especially where the big cities are located. Indeed the effort of the Federal government to enforce the law in these centers constitute a veritable battle in which many of the so-called respectable elements, law-abiding in other respects, are arrayed against the prohibition law. In most of these States there are no State laws to back up or aid the Federal officers and the Federal courts are clogged with cases of violation.

Need Drastic Laws.
"Now take a state like North Carolina which has a State law against the manufacture and sale of liquor. It shares with the Federal government the enforcement of the law and prohibition there is a far simpler problem. What is needed are drastic State prohibition laws in Maryland, Pennsylvania, New York, Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, New Jersey and Kentucky. Public sentiment in those States is not behind the Volstead act. Prohibition was foisted upon them by the Federal amendment. Not so in a State like North Carolina and a dozen of other States, where the States themselves adopted prohibition before the Federal amendment was ratified.

"The 50,000,000 gallons of bonded liquor is a standing menace to the enforcement of the law. Congress refused to appropriate sufficient money to guard this liquor and every day hundreds of gallons of it are being stolen and sold by bootleggers in the big cities. This unlawful traffic has attracted thousands of professional criminals. Hold-up men and burglars have gone to bootlegging and smuggling. They can make more money at this business and in the majority of cases they escape punishment."

GOOD WORD FOR ADVERTISING

A dispatch from Holdrege, Neb., states that thousands of people from within a radius of 30 miles of that small city of 2,500 people drove recently to help Frank Johnson celebrate the 35th anniversary of his establishment in business and get a slice of the cake he had built for the occasion. It measured 18 feet in circumference and three feet in depth and weighed 2,094 pounds.

Johnson is the biggest and richest merchant in this section of the State. His motto is, "The only place I know of where money is made without advertising is the United States Mint."

This small-town merchant is the heaviest advertiser in the State outside of Lincoln and Omaha. He reaches out into all the territory and farmers come as far as 70 miles to trade with him. He sold $500,000 worth of goods last year.

Under the motive power of his genius the city has recently paved all her business streets and built an auditorium that seats 3,000 persons. It was dedicated by John McCormack, Irish tenor, and the gate receipts were over $10,000.

PLEGGED TO COX

Charlotte Observer.

"The New York Post, one of the most influential newspapers of independent thought in the United States, has made formal pledge for Cox and the League of Nations. It has done so after mature consideration of present day political situations and after having been forced to abandon any hope of Harding's integrity in the matter of the league. In presenting the reasons which have influenced it to take this course. The Post presents the case briefly and unanswerably. Its argument is worthy the thought of the Nation and its pledge is made not only for itself, but for 'a great mass of independent American citizenship.' The clean-cut statement of The Post is that—

The paramount issue in the presidential campaign is the Treaty of Peace and the League of Nations with safeguarding reservations. Shall America keep faith with her partners in the war? Shall America join with them in the only honorable and effective way of making peace with Germany? Shall America enter heart and soul upon the work of maintaining the peace of the world as she did upon the task of winning the war?

To these questions Governor Cox answered Yes and Senator Harding answered No. If The Evening Post during the week that has elapsed since Governor Cox's speech of acceptance, has held in abeyance its declaration of choice between the two candidates, the reason was not that we were in doubt concerning Governor Cox's affirmative stand on the Treaty and the League. We waited only to see whether Senator Harding would hold fast to his policy of negotiation.

Senator Harding has maintained his No to the question of America's honor, duty, and ultimate best interests. The issue is thus clearly joined. The Evening Post, believing that it speaks for a great mass of independent American citizenship, pledges its hearty support to the Democratic nominees, in whom it sees embodied the highest aims and ideals of the American people.
