As soon as he had finished his school work he went into the mail service and his promotion was quite rapid. At the time of his going into the service as a soldier he was holding a very important clerkship on one of the best runs in the mail service. Upon being called to the colors he was sent to camp where his training was very brief. He was soon on the other side where he had an opportunity to display the fine qualities of manhood and courage that were his. A young man of brilliant intellect, he soon become a leader and favorite among the soldier boys. Knowing not the meaning of fear, he was always found at the front in every situation calling for courage and valor. Seriously wounded in battle in the last hours of the great struggle Sergeant Duval treated his wounds lightly and made no complaint. Invitations were issued to a tacky of Mrs. Eugene Cross, lead by their captain, Mrs. D. E. Hudgins. They came in jolly spirits and bright and laughable attire to the party. When the bell was rung, and the door was epened for their reception by & figure dressed in robes similar to those of the Ku Klux Klan, and in a dim corner near the door another body of these same sepulchral figures were seen, the expression of jovialness faded into one just a little dubious, but as the finger of the defeated captain pointed straight ahead, they marched up the stairway, where they were directed to the dressing rooms by the silent figures of more of the same klan. When the guests were seated the D. N. Lonon defeated team gave this reassuring W. J. Patton yell, just to let all know they were John A. Finley humans:

Mrs. Minnie Blanton and Mrs. T. E. Snipes were the lucky winners in the cake walk, and were presented with the beautifully iced cake, which when cut was just a corn bread cake. All deceptions were forgotten when ice cream and cakes were served, and from all appearances the ladies were delighted with the evening's entertainment.
