

CONSERVATION NEWS

By L. B. HAIR

Cecil Gibson of Glenwood, with the assistance of Clint Simmons and his tractor, reworked his terraces last week. Mr. Gibson says he finds it pays to keep his terraces with a broad base and wide flow line. They will hold and carry more water than narrow terraces.

J. D. Miller, District Conservationist from Newton, and J. R. Herndon, Zone Conservationist, from the regional office of the Soil Conservation Service, Spartanburg, S. C., visited this work unit recently. While these men were in the county they visited several farmers that are applying soil conservation practices to their farms. W. L. Greenlee, District Supervisor, and others assisted the Conservationists in making their visits to the several farms.

C. C. Woody of Greenlee says the ditch through his wet bottom land is really doing a good job. Mr. Woody states that this wet area has dried so that he plans to use the tractor and disc in preparing a seed bed for grass and clover here.

"The three main causes of accidents are: I didn't see; I didn't think, and I didn't know."

This the 10th day of February, 1949. PAUL J. STORY, Trustee

Hybrid Corn Makes Better Yield

(By S. L. Homewood, County Agent)

For the past four years the County Agents office has carried on work with a number of farmers in order to get the most suitable varieties of hybrid corn for McDowell County. In 1948 the following farmers carried these demonstrations out on their farms: Elmer Buchanan, Dysartsville section; John A. Early, Crooked Creek section; Guy Little, Providence section; J. C. Rabb, Pleasant Gardens section; Willie Elliott, Air Port section, and Nolan Lawing, of the Greenlee section.

In these demonstrations the following varieties of hybrid corn were planted, and we feel we got sufficient results to recommend these varieties; leading in all demonstrations was US 282 with 76.68 bushels per acre average for all the farmers participating, second was N. C. T20 with 73.20 bushels, third, Tennessee 10 with 72.48 bushels, fourth was N. C. 26 with 70.13 bushels, fifth, Dixie 17 with 67.49 bushels, sixth, open pollinated corn with 55.45 bushels, seventh was 1030 with 54.03 bushels, eighth was N. C. 27 with 52.88 bushels, ninth, Ledford with 51.68 bushels, tenth was P170 with 43.85 bushels, and the eleventh was Greys with 41.06 bushels.

This was the results of the four years of this demonstration. The five leading hybrids have been leading each year, although they have shifted places as N. C. T20 was first last year, and the year before Tennessee 10 was first. Four years ago US282 gave the highest yield. From the results of these demonstrations we feel that we are safe in recommending these hybrids. Three of them are being produced in McDowell County, therefore seed will be available for this planting season. The varieties grown were US 282, Dixie 17, and N. C. 720. There has been one noted condition with the hybrid corn, and that is the seeds that were produced locally here in the County produced 8 to 25 bushels more corn per acre than seed that was ordered from outside the County.

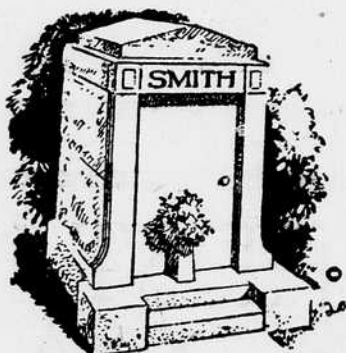

It is hoped that every farmer who plans to plant corn in 1949 will study these figures and get the hybrid most suited for their local conditions.

Clyde Gilliam in the Crooked Creek section has been producing hybrid corn for seed for the last four years, and was the first producer of hybrid seed corn in the County. He started producing US 282 in 1944 and is still producing this variety.

Howard Lawing, of the Glenwood section, has been producing N. C. T20 for the past two years. There is still need for other hybrid seed corn growers in the County, as these producers have not been able to produce enough for the demand. Hybrid corn alone will not make big yields, but with proper seed, proper seed bed preparation, the right fertilizer, the correct methods of cultivation it will make better yields.

TALL TALES

By ELIZABETH WHITTEN

Walking down the street one morning I watched the town sprinkler wash trash up on the cement parking space at a filling station. In a few moments the man at the filling station came out with a hose and washed the trash back into the street.

Bit of conversation overheard in a cafe:

And boss said to me, be nice to the customers and try to sell to them. And I said to him: "what customers?"

Man is looking for a woman to work for him. Said he wanted a teen-age girl who is nice looking, dresses well and doesn't care anything about the boys.

Should be an interesting case.

Woman went to visit a doctor. Told him she didn't feel well. He wrote a prescription for her, told her to come back in two weeks.

Two weeks passed. She returned. Said she didn't feel well.

"Are you taking the medicine regularly?" he asked.

"You know I never did have that prescription filled. Do you think I should?"

"Whatever you think," the doctor smiled tolerantly.

Man climbed the steep steps to the court house until he reached the third floor. Just went up to ask the people there where the post office is.

Woman went into a store to ask if they had a cardboard box they would give her to mail a package in. She followed the manager down the vacant aisles to the counter the boxes were under. Just as he was up to his ears in boxes, she exclaimed: "Look quick! There's a customer coming in the door!"

And there was the woman with three small children who went to visit the woman who doesn't have any children. In the midst of the conversation the "woman without" grabbed the mother by the sleeve. "Look quick," she called excitedly, "your child is still!"

And the Mama and Daddy who were seated in the living room one evening. All at once Mama said: "Daddy, you'd better go see about the children. They've been upstairs 15 minutes without fighting."

Woman walked into the beauty parlor to make an appointment to get a permanent Tuesday.

"I don't know what time I can come," she explained, "but I want you to be ready to take me when I get here."

Woman called up a business firm one morning to know if they could have a purchase wrapped when she called for it a little later in the day, so she wouldn't have to wait. Cost of purchase—one nickel.

And the woman who submitted her income tax blank to the collector with the back of the blank covered with names in tiny, fine writing, crowded close together.

"What is all this?" he frowned.

"That word," she said, pointing to the form.

"What word? Oh, dependants?" he smiled.

"Yes," she nodded, "they say that means relatives. I have a few more, but I couldn't get them all on there."

Yes sir. One interesting thing about newspaper work, you meet such interesting people.
