

LOUISA'S LETTER

Dear Girls:—

I heard a friend, several days ago, laughingly tell of her small daughter's worry over money matters. It seems that the father's salary had been cut but that he was still very comfortably fixed.

The little daughter, however, had been hearing her parents discuss the reduction and had come to the conclusion that the family were in a terrible state. Each day when the father came home to dinner the little girl's first question was, "Did you make any money today, Daddy?"

Personally, I think it was very unfortunate that she was allowed to worry over the family finances so much. Children worry over some things a great deal more than grown-ups do, and this child's anxiety was so unnecessary.

Now, I certainly do not approve of letting children spend extravagantly and live ahead of the family budget in order to allow them to dwell in a fool's paradise of luxuries. This is equally as harmful as making them pinch pennies when there is no reason to do so.

I remember one woman of my acquaintance, whose husband's nose stayed to the grindstone and who was harried and distressed over bills each month, who let her children have every desire granted. They spent more money and wore finer clothes than their companions whose families were far wealthier than theirs.

This woman said that she never discussed whether they could or could not afford anything with them as she wanted them to grow up carefree as regards to finances. That attitude seemed very, very foolish to me for if there is one thing children should be taught it is the value of money and particularly those children who have to make their own living when they grow up.

It seems to me a very unfair thing not to teach a child how to spend or save and then when he is grown expect him to acquire this knowledge over night, as it were.

And we can teach this habit without great worry for them. The true art in teaching children the value of money is to let them enjoy their spending and saving—not to be distressed over it.

Yours,
LOUISA.

Lana Turner's first film since her marriage will be "The Reformer and the Redhead," according to MGM. Her last picture was "The Three Musketeers," which was completed months ago.

Twentieth Century-Fox wants Fred MacMurray to remain at their studio after he finishes work on "Father Was a Full-back," for "Spare the Rod," a comedy which Frederick Hazlitt Brennan is adapting from a story by Gwen Davenport. It deals with the family adventures of a child psychiatrist.

Ingrid Bergman leaves soon for Italy where she will appear in a film to be directed by Roberto Rossellini, director of "Open City," and "Paisan." The film is scheduled to start about April 1st and will be made in ten weeks on a budget of approximately $174,000. Miss Bergman is to share in the profits on a partnership basis. The story of the film, which is as yet untitled, will be about an English-speaking displaced woman who marries an Italian fisherman and goes to live with him on the island of Stromboli, off Sicily.

When Charlotte Greenwood finishes, "Oh, You Beautiful Doll," for George Jessel, she may resume her role in the play "I Remember Mama." Abbott and Costello want her for a picture. That would be quite a team, wouldn't it?

Ida Lupino's sister, Rita, has been signed by Paramount to appear in "Red, Hot and Blue," with Billy Daniels, dance director of the picture, who will do a dance sequence with her.

The film, "I Remember Mama," was chosen through a poll of the 1,500,000 readers of Christian Herald magazine and the United Church Women's Clubs of America, representatives of Protestant denominations, as the "best family picture of 1948." Miss Irene Dunn was presented a plaque from the Protestant Motion Picture Council for her excellent performance in the title role of the film.

A story around the last days of Mussolini's life, now titled "Dawn at Dongo"—Dongo was the place where Mussolini died—is being developed by Bob Buckner and will probably go into production when Buckner finishes "Desert Legion."

Eddie Cantor is looking for a studio to film his life story. The deal with Warner Brothers, to make his biography, is "completely off," according to Cantor. Cantor had two specifications in connection with the film: 1. It had to cost at least $2,000,000; and, 2. It had to be in color. Warners, undergoing a serious shake-up, wanted to postpone such an expensive film at this time, but Cantor declined and so, the deal was off.

Nanken cloth is said to derive its name from Nanking, China, where it is said to have been first manufactured.

Whether you iron by hand or have a modern ironer these are musts to keep your sheets and linen towels well-groomed.

First, sprinkle with clear warm water—it penetrates the fibre more evenly. Fold each piece separately until you iron. Dampened clothes should stand several hours before ironing—when the weather is cool and dry they can stand overnight, but when it's damp and hot, iron within a few hours to avoid mildew.

Light cottons need hot temperature. Iron your cottons while damp; keep hems straight and even and iron till dry. Be sure wrinkles are not ironed in selvages. Vary the folds of your sheets, guest towels, tablecloths, napkins, etc. by creasing off center, first to the right and then to the left. Do as much folding by hand as you can to save wear.

For pure linen use a very hot iron and iron while linen is damp. For embroidery or monograms, iron on the wrong side.

Pillow case advice—iron the closed end first.

Never iron terry towels or wash cloths as it flattens the loops making them less absorbant, and they feel stiff and harsh.
