MORNINGS GETTING CHILLY?

Yet days are as warm as midsummer... so you shiver through, the morning chill rather than waste fuel, or have your house too warm later in the day.

Neither is necessary. An electric heater is the perfect answer to chilly mornings. By simply and quickly plugging in your heater you can have a warm bathroom, a glowing breakfast nook, or a cozy corner for bathing baby.

Spot your heat where you need it, the clean convenient way, at the cost of a few pennies a day!

Library Notes

BY ALICE BRYAN
 County Librarian

New members registered at the Library:

Two-year-old Robert Fleming Burnette, Jr., took home the books "Who Lives at My House" by Friskey and "Little French Farm" by Lida for his first library books.

Other new members: Clarence G. Condrey, M. T. Elliott, Floyd Wayne Gibson, Billie Jean Greene, Edna Hall, Mary Elizabeth McCall, Mary Margaret McCall, Mrs. W. C. Parker, Kathryn Ann Patton, Sally Emma Patton, Hershel James Shuford, David Ronald Thomas, and Pearl E. Wood.

Among the new books:

For adults) "World Faith; the story of the religions of the United Nations," by Ruth Cranston—"Explains the basic philosophies of seven great religious groups; Hindu, Buddhist, Confucianist, Taoist, Moslem, Christian and Jewish."

"It's an Old Wild West Custom" by Duncan Emrich—"Past and present information about the West which ranges from geography and Indians to superstitions and songs. A skimming of the highlights of the names and places, mines and people, of the glory and decline of the towns, of the saloons and gambling, of rugged horse play, of the girls and the famous madams of individual and gang violence and lawlessness, of religion and its persons, of the colorful language and the regional food, of cattle brands and tall tales."

"The End is Known" by Geoffrey Holiday Hall—Mystery.

The new set of "World-Book Encyclopedia" is already being used at the library. Both young people and adults are finding the encyclopedias interesting as well as helpful. The articles are simply written and fully illustrated. Biographies of many famous living people are included, from Walt Disney to President Truman. Many how-to-make and how-to-do articles will be helpful for special project work. Of special interest are the articles on making dolls, vases, model airplanes, Christmas cards, and making and flying kites.

(For children) "Desert Animals" by Rita Kissin—beautifully illustrated picture book of animals that live on the desert.

"The Story of Phillis Wheatley" by Shirley Graham—Young people's biography of the Boston slave girl, poet of the American Revolution who translated Ovid at fifteen, was received in the best drawing rooms of Boston, was entertained in England by the Countess of Huntington and the Lord Mayor of London, and praised by Tom Paine, John Hancock, and General Washington.

"Cocolo Comes to America" by Bettina—An adorable donkey and his small owner come to the United States from their Mediterranean Island home, experiencing city and country adventures here.

"The Phantom Roar" by Stephen Holt—Cruelty had made an outlaw of the Phantom Roar, until a badly injured leg forced him to the campfire of Glenn Barnes one night. Glenn had troubles enough of his own, but his love for horses made him care for the wild horse. In helping the horse, he found a solution to his own problems.

"The Black Stallion and Satan" by Walter Farley—Which is the faster horse—Black Stallion or his son Satan? Alec, their young owner, longs to know. When Black Stallion returns from Arabia, the contest looms, and a forest fire gives the answer.

"Dig for Treasure" by Dean Marshall—Story of lively children going camping on their own; of a long-lost necklace whose story vivifies American tradition; of family problems solved.

"Ghost At Garnet Lodge" by Frances Duncombe — Perplexing "ghost" appearances, splendid character portrayal, a fine American family's gallant struggle to establish a skiing resort in an inherited mountain lodge makes this an exceptional mystery story.
