CAROLINA COLLEGE AND MAXTON

The proposed enlargement at Carolina College would insure the coming to Maxton in the near future of one hundred to one hundred and fifty young women, who would spend nine months here during the year. Carolina College must expand for the reason that its present limits can not accommodate the number of girls who would come here. We can not expect young women to come here nor can we invite them until comfortable accommodations are made for them.

The activities, the program and plans of the present administration have aroused a new interest in our College, and have inspired a feeling of co-operation from the citizens of this town and community, which has not heretofore existed. To those who have visited the College and observed its activities during the present school year, it is clearly evident that there exists among its student body a college spirit and a loyalty to its administration which could hardly be surpassed in any college in the state.

For this fine spirit and loyalty to continue to grow, and in order that the administration may carry on its plans, in which we all have faith, it is imperative that Carolina College have a dormitory in the immediate future. Maxton entered into a solemn pledge for the growth and continued enlargement on this College as one of the conditions of which it was located here. In my opinion to build a dormitory now, would forever terminate the plans of those who have looked on Maxton with envious eyes, in the hope that finally Carolina College might be removed to another community.

Carolina College means much to this town and section in a social way. With its growth would come the refined and cultured intellectual development that grows into any college community. It would bring many high class entertainments to the town, which would not be attracted otherwise. It would give Maxton a wide acquaintance throughout the Carolinas, through the young women sent out from year to year, and all this would attract a high class of citizenship to our community.

Such a growth would mean much to our town financially, and every business man in the town would be benefited, directly or indirectly. One hundred and fifty girls would put a nice sum of money into circulation here each year, and this brings it home to the business men, for what tends to develop a community, tends to develop those who live there.

The present need of this institution should make its appeal to the heart of every man, woman and child in this community, regardless of religious faith or creed. For after all what of the meager distinctions in our great Christian denominations? They are but branches of the great Protestant Faith, seeking to teach to the world the tenets of the Christian religion. We need all these good agencies to make our community bigger and better. Our town and college, and what we make of them for the future, are going to be just what we make them, and let all of us merge our faith in our community interest in this big undertaking.

J. E. Carpenter.

CAROLINA'S IMPORTANT PLACE

ery side of her personality Her view point is broadened. She has the opportunity and is encouraged to thoughtfully and deliberately decide what she wants to do with her life—and she has thrown about her a wholesome christian influence to help her decide wisely.

Such a college is Carolina. I believe that Carolina has a place—a great future, else why has it stood through such adversities and hardships? We who love her and appreciate what she has done for us are exceedingly anxious that she shall go forward—her influence broaden, so that many more young girls may have the privilege that we have had.

Because I have been a member of the college family and am now a citizen of the town I can realize how much more the college can mean to the community if we will just give it a chance. Let us pledge our support and co-operation—yes, and prayers—that this effort toward the new dormitory and toward growth in every way, may be successful.

An Appreciative Carolina Girl.
We live in a town with some buzz. It'll not be afraid. To give us some aid. And Carolina won't be like she was. Rachel Havelton, College Department 1922-'23.

There is a Junior College, Carolina is her name, And much we all would do To help to spread her fame. She fills girls full of knowledge More'n any other college. But she needs a dormitory just the same. Mildred Thomas, College Department 1922-'23.

CAROLINA

Carolina is a grand old place; It teaches culture, wisdom, grace. We'll always love and praise her name May our success increase her fame.

Her teachers are worthy, kind and true; They never have too much to do To listen to all our troubles and woes And help us conquer our faults and foes.

Her campus too, is a haven of rest. That Gods own smile has beamed on and blest. It offers us basket-ball, tennis, croquet And all kinds of games that we girls like to play.

Her building is ringing with college-girls' laughter That will sound in its halls thru years hereafter. Within its walls are music, books, art— There's much to learn; for each a part.

So we pledge Carolina our loyalty true The years that go by will but make us love more Our own Carolina that now we adore. Mayre Sawyer, Student 1922-'23.

EASTER EXERCISES

Maxton people have gotten into the habit of looking forward with much pleasure to the Easter exercises every year at the Methodist church. They are always good, but the children excelled all former efforts on last Sunday night, and interested the largest gathering ever seen in the church building. Standing room was about all there was left, and there was not much of that.

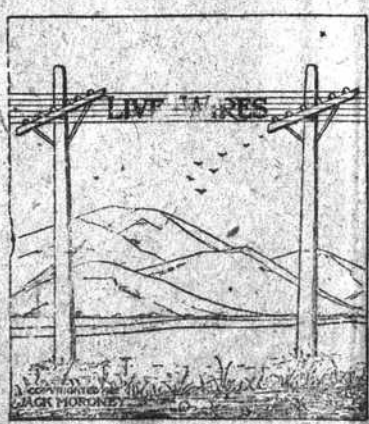

A group of large girls and boys composed the choir properly, and there in the very front ranks, the "cradle roll" did some wonderful singing. They evidently felt their responsibility in the success of the occasion. The real significance of Easter was emphasized in both song and story.

Little W. L. Boggan, Jr., and Master Samuel Blackwell, Jr., bid fair to be fine orators so far as their present tender age, they spoke without hesitation or fear. "Uncle Dave" has a wonderful faculty for driving out the best in his big band of little workers.

"God be thanked for books; they are voices of the distant and the dead and make us heir of the spiritual life of past ages."—Channing.

GET RID OF THAT COLD
The majority of the COLDS now prevalent in MAXTON could be easily side-tracked within a short time if the sufferer took proper care of himself. So often one hears of letting the COLD take its natural course. This is entirely wrong. It may hang on all winter or develop into a much more serious sickness than had been anticipated.
