PINEHURST is a unique town in the Southland—apparently a Yankee village dropped down in the woods. It is located in Moore County, North Carolina, in the well-known sand belt, and among the health-giving long-leaf pines. It is six miles from Southern Pines, 70 miles southwest of Raleigh, and 125 miles from the sea coast. It is elevated 650 feet above the sea level, and is noted for its healthfulness.

THE village was founded by James W. Tufts, of Boston, in 1895, and has already become one of the most popular resorts in the South. The Holly Inn has been enlarged since last season, and is first class in all its appointments. The Casino building contains on the first floor a restaurant where good board may be obtained at moderate rates, a ladies' parlor and bath rooms. The second story has reading room supplied with the leading papers and magazines and a game room, for the use of all the villagers free of charge; and pool and bath rooms connected are for the use of all upon payment of a small fee. A new village store building with more floor space than any other store in the county, is filled with a stock of general merchandise. A fine bowling alley has just been completed, with a barber shop connected. A circulating library of more than 1,500 volumes, and a steam laundry have recently been established. Pretty cottages dot the village and are rented at moderate rates. For further information, illustrated and descriptive circulars, address
