It's Different Now.

In days of old, when knights were bold And barons held their sway, The knights tuned lutes and pressed their suits In a romantic way; With many a tale did they regale Their lady loves full fair, And fairy sprites on moonlit nights Were keeping cases there.

"Milady," said Sir Launcelot, kneeling in the dust of the blood washed arena at the feet of the Queen, "cast but thy soulful eyes with pleasure upon thy vassal who bath by his own prowess unhorsed sixty thousand knights and a dozen dragons, and by Merlin's beard, fair one, will I go fourth, even unto the ends of the world, and fetch the Golden Fleece wherewith to dazzle the braggart Arthur."

In modern days the lover's ways Are very much more humble— He does not screech a flowered speech, But makes a sorry mumble; If he would land, he grabs her hand As tightly as he dares, And while she waits and palpitates, Delightfully embarrassed.

"Ah—er—Genevieve—er Lizzie, that is," stammered the quaking swain, getting his heiresses mixed, "I—er—that is, you know, you don't care if I squeeze your hand, do you? Oh! how perfectly delightful! Do you know, Clara—er Maud, I should say—er—excuse me, Lizzie I mean—Lizzie, do you know that I fairly worshipped the ground you walked on the minute I discovered its location? Will you be—a mine?" And the blushing damsel replied: "You mean, will I be a mint, don't you, ducky?"

And yet, you see, you must agree There isn't much in choosing— In days of old they had no gold, So played safe, win or losing; At any time, in any clime, You'll find love is ambitious, So never mind—perhaps you'll find Some heiress that is good and kind, And season that's propitious.

Since Betty Golfs.

Since Betty golfs my wit is daring, No longer is my wooing tame; My very language has grown bolder, You see, I've learned to talk the game.

If she but hints I am too eager, I swear it is a brassie lie! And say she knows the mashie's making, And then address her with a sigh.

Sometimes when driving o'er the meadow, And Betty wants a little tee, She can't object if then I tell her A high ball is the thing for me!

And when she hazards the suggestion That my approach is much too near, I wooden spoon, so I assure her, And say, "You're playing two, my dear."

But some day, when the game is over, She'll hold a loftier head divine And, knowing that we've finished playing She'll putter little hand in mine.

TAFT WINS SHOOTING TROPHY

Twenty-five Target Tie Shoot-off Feature of Tuesday's Tourney.

The second event in the winter's series of trap shooting fixtures, fifty singles, Magautrap, shot Tuesday, resulted in the prettiest, closest contests ever seen here, C. A. Taft, Whitinsville, Mass., winning from C. A. Lockwood, New York, by the narrow margin of three targets in a twenty-five bird tie shoot-off, breaking fifty-eight of the seventy-five targets thrown.

Taft and Lockwood both started out at a record breaking pace, soon distancing the field. Lockwood smashed the first 16 birds straight, and Taft the first 14, Taft leading at the end of the first string with 23 to Lockwood's 22. One of the peculiar features of the match was the missing of five straight by Taft on the second twenty-five. The scores:
