GAME CHICKEN SECRETS

Southerner Tells how Blooded Fighting Birds are Raised.

Tricks of Trade Handed Down from Generation to Generation and Carefully Guarded.

THE raising of game chickens for the poultry show and for the pit, are two distinctly different industries, said a Southerner at the The Inn, the other evening. The former requires only for the phenomenal success of birds raised by certain southern breeders.

First of all, the birds have been raised only for fighting purposes, and year after year of careful breeding and selection, have developed qualities which could be secured in no other way. Birds are only raised from winners and sisters of winners.

The chickens are kept together from the time they are hatched in the spring until the young cockerels, or "stags," begin to manifest fighting proclivities. That comes in the fall. They are then separated and each stag is placed on a "walk." This means that a farmer or negro is paid a certain sum to take the cock and keep him on his farm with not more than six hens, in such a place that a thorough knowledge of poultry breeding, while the latter combines not only this but involves a number of fine points which are only known to a few who have been long and closely connected with the work. These little secrets have, in many cases, been handed down from generation to generation, carefully guarded, and each chicken fighter in the south feels that the success of his birds is largely dependent upon them, and, they are, without doubt, largely responsible he will not come in contact with any other cock for the period of a year.

One would think the bird should be fighting all that time to develop his mettle, but careful study has shown that this is not the case. During the period, the bird sees no other cocks; he is absolutely king of the little realm in which he rules, and he realizes it. He grows in stature, dignity and courage. In a few months, nothing can encroach on his territory without a challenge and stub-
