Gen. Wheeler's Last Story.

Golden Age (New York) for February, contains an interesting story from the pen of the late General "Joe" Wheeler, on Recollections of West Point Fifty Years Ago. In the course of his story General Wheeler describes his first meeting with General Robert E. Lee, then Colonel and Superintendent of the Academy, as follows:

"I found my way to the door of the office of the Superintendent of the Academy. The orderly, whose duty it was to announce visitors, was for a moment absent, and being ignorant of military rules I knocked at the door. I heard the words 'come in.' As I entered, this remarkable man rose from his seat behind his desk, met me as I approached, and placing his hand upon my shoulder, said with a welcome smile: 'A young cadet who has come to report?' Never have I seen a form or face which so impressed me; his uniform was closely buttoned, showing his erect, well rounded and perfect figure; his manner was dignified and embodied modesty, kindness, benevolence and all the characteristics which convey the idea of purity and nobility. He was in his forty-ninth year, mustache faced, with slightly gray hair. * * *

"In reply to the question I bowed to express the affirmative and after a few kind words he took me to the door of the office of the Adjutant, Lieutenant I. B. Fry, afterwards a prominent General, telling me that Lieutenant Fry would give me all instructions and directions. This kind, fatherly reception was different from my preconceived idea of military decorum; there was not a particle of austerity in the bearing of either Colonel Lee or Lieutenant Fry."

In this connection it is interesting to know that it was the desire of General Wheeler to write of the history that he had helped to make, and it is sad to learn that he died before he had lived out this ambition which lay close to his heart.

With this purpose in view shortly before his death, he became a stockholder in the Golden Age Company and director and historical editor of the magazine, a new publication edited and published by southern men in New York.

In addition to General Wheeler's article there is a thrilling dramatic narrative covering General Wheeler's campaign at Chickamauga.

The price of the magazine is one dollar annually, and the publication office, 48 West Twenty-seventh Street, New York.

The Weight of The Crown.

In the Weight of the Crown, by Fred M. White (R. F. Fenno and Company), we find another of the so-called political novels which seem to be the fashion of late. In this story the plot centers about a certain King of Asturia in whose fortunes Russia, Germany and England are deeply interested. The scene is laid in London and the occurrences described in the three hundred odd pages are thrilling enough to furnish sensations for a dozen ordinary novels.

There is a prevailing belief that the English do not know how to "hustle." Anyone who will consider the actions of the heroine during a single evening will be convinced that this is an erroneous idea. Such a whisking about in cabs and automobiles! Such exciting interviews with princes, diplomats and lovers! Above all what an amazing theft, all for love, and what remarkable cases of masquerading!

Of course everything comes out all right. Virtue is rewarded, vice punished, Russia does not get Asturia, the Queen is freed from the crown's weight and the lovers find their path strewn with roses.

Knocks, Witty, Wise, and—

"Knocks, Witty, Wise and—" by Minna Thomas Antrim, (George W. Jacobs & Co.,) is a booklet in keeping with the title, well illustrated and unique, of convenient pocket size as it should be, and very daintily printed. The "knocks" are in all truth, "witty, wise and—." Here are a few of them:

It takes oceans of time and barrels of money to be a consistent sinner.

All that a good cry is to a woman, a round swear is to an angry man.

Long tongues and short tempers are usually mated.

Bright Ideas for Entertaining.

"Bright Ideas for Entertaining" by Mrs. Herbert B. Linscott, (Jacobs,) expresses itself in the title, and little further comment is necessary. There is an ever present need for such a book and this one meets requirements as they have never been met before. Not only are the ideas "bright," but they are unique and almost endless in variety, as well.

The March Delineator.

In the March number The Delineator has fallen under the spell of romance which the marriage of the President's daughter has evoked, and presents as its leading feature an article on "The Brides of the White House," illustrated with a handsome portrait of Miss Roosevelt never before published. The fiction of the number includes a short story by Mary Stewart Cutting, a clever study of child life by Virginia Woodward Cloud, and the continuation of "The President of Quex," Helen M. Winslow's interesting club story. Viola Allen, the popular young actress, who recently married a southern millionaire, writes of Shakespeare's heroines from the point of view of one who has personated many of them with great success. Dr. Murray concludes her series on "The Rights of the Child" with a paper on growth and development; and a unique feature beginning in this number is "Houses by Correspondence," the first being The Doctor's House. Stories and pastimes are supplied for the amusement of children, and in the other departments many topics of interest and value to the home
