SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1906.

Up-to-Date.

With in the heart of Devonshire,
Amid most pleasant lands,
The ancient Castle Errolsmere,
Proud and majestic stands.

'Twas built in William Conq'ror's day
By first of the de Veres,
And in this family did stay
More than eight hundred years.

It stayed with them though empires fell
And kingdoms passed away—
Till a de Vere said he would sell
To anyone who'd pay.

Well, Mr. Hiram Brown he paid
Three hundred thousand pounds,
(In Yankee pork his wealth was made),
He took the "house and grounds."

'Twas thus the home of Vere de Vere
Was bartered off for gold;
And now, at Castle Errolsmere
Strange sights we may behold!

An elevator has been placed
Within the old North Tower,
Electric fountains now have graced
The stately Ladies' Bower.

The ancient chapel has been made
A private play house grand,
And comic op'ras there are played
Just as by roy'l command.

Then a historic donjon-keep
Is turned—(though some may laugh,
The thoughtful ones would rather weep)—
Into a Turkish bath!

They have laid out a fine race-course;
The interesting mews
Have now been taken from the horse—
'Tis autos that they use.

They utilize the castle moat,
But in a way most "cute;"
The little Brown boys do just dote
Upon their "shoot-the-chute!"

—The Antiquarian, in Smart Set.

This world is full of magic,
A strange enchanted spot;
Sometimes it's rather tragic,
But mostly it is not.
Some man, quite ordinary,
Grows rich ere set of sun.
The trick's perplexing, very,
I wonder how it's done.

A youth of feeble seeming
An heiress will ensnare.
A wild romancer's dreaming
Sells stock most anywhere.
The wise man does the labor,
And the idler has the fun.
I'm not jealous of my neighbor,
But I wonder how it's done.

—Washington Star.

Interested in Canadian Hotels.

Herbert B. Locke, room clerk at The Carolina several seasons ago, spent a portion of the week here doing missionary work in behalf of the Hotel Roberval and the Island House, located at the headwaters of the Saguenay river, in Canada,
of which he is General Manager.

The section is one long famous for its wilderness life, and Manager Locke proposes to bring it even more prominently
before the public through careful advertising and excellent hotel accommodations.

Last Week of The Zoo.

The coming week will be the last of the season at The Zoo, and big crowds are looked for.
