KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

HE many who met Mrs. George Riggs (Kate Douglas Wiggin) during her long sojourn here, will be interested to know that her first suggestion for Rebecca, undoubtedly her most successful book, was received in a dream during her visit to Pinehurst.

A recent article in The United Presbyterian says:

fact that already five thousand letters concerning this delightful heroine have come to her creator * * * * *

Mrs. Riggs is remembered by those who met her here as a charming woman of culture and refinement and her return is anticipated by a large circle of acquaintances. During the past few years she has come rapidly into prominence, the sale of her books having long since passed the coveted million mark.

"Mrs. Wiggin has herself confessed that Rebecca is a dream child, and indeed are not all genuine characters of fiction dream children to a certain degree?"

"One night while at Pinehurst, N. C., Mrs. George Riggs dreamed of seeing a stage coach on a country road with a black-eyed child in a buff dress, looking out of the window and trying to attract the attention of the driver. From this dream came the charming story.

"The interest which Rebecca has occasioned may best be realized by the Explanation.

There was a man who, years ago, Made a mistake and, filled with woe, He started in, with might and main, To conscientiously explain. And so much time he thus applied That, though to do his best he tried, He made new errors o'er and o'er, Tried to explain, and made some more. Another man just went ahead, Nor heeded what the others said, Quoth he, "I ne'er apologize, Yet I'm accounted rich and wise." He ne'er begged pardon. He stood pat And said he wanted more than that. Success doth stoutly try again, While failure lingers to explain.
