A DREAM WHICH IS REALITY

Story, Picture and Harmony Blended Into One Delicious Whole.

J. Townsend Russell is Orator, Poet, Artist, Musician, Interpreter and Idealist.

As Edwin Booth interpreted the plays of Shakespeare so you with beautiful illustrations and appropriate music, interpret to the understanding and to the heart, Longfellow's "Tales of a Wayside Inn * * * *"

Thus Prof. Franklin W. Hooper, Director of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, wrote of J. Townsend Russell's "Picture Reading," and the unqualified tribute is but suggestive of the exquisite character of the presentafirelight, to Uncle Tom's stories; an interpretation absolutely original and unique, which makes one not a listener, but a part and parcel of the story itself, giving it new meaning and added understanding.

From the moment Mr. Russell speaks until the momentary silence which follows his closing dream, you are as one in an entrancing dream, from which you awake to find that it was reality! Never have the possibilities of this art been realized and developed as Mr. Russell has realized and developed them in his "Picture Readings."

Mr. Russell's reading is masterly and his interpretation is that of the author; his voice deep and musical, his personality charming. The color pictures or illustrations, thrown upon the screen, one hundred and fifty in number, are masterpieces in drawing, color and composition, and ever and always is the consciousness of the musical accompaniment; soft, tender, soothing, like the gurgle of a mountain brook, ever changing as a gust of wind wafts it to and fro.

tion; combining as it does, the charm of orator, poet, artist, musician, interpreter and idealist.

Superbly carried out as the result of years of creative thought, Mr. Russell's readings stand absolutely alone, the recollection of the evening a picture which memory glorifies; story, picture and harmony blended into a perfect whole.

Pinehurst is, indeed, fortunate at having heard Mr. Russell, and the audience which assembled in The Carolina Music hall, Thursday evening, at the reading given in aid of the Chapel Fund, was one of the largest in the history of the Village; its interest and appreciation so keen that it charged the very air with its silence, giving way to enthusiastic applause between the tales.

So happily combined is reading, illustration and music—so perfectly balanced—that one is conscious only of rare delight, like the child who listens in the BIBLE READING SUNDAY.

As a result of the reading nearly one hundred and fifty dollars was netted, and added interest is given because Mr. Russell has consented in response to enthusiastic requests, to give his famous Bible reading Sunday evening, next; generally regarded as the masterpiece of his series.
