"SNOW BIRDS" LIGHT HERE

Feature of Week is Visit of Famous Detroit Golfing Club.

Dinner, Golf Tournament, Team Match and Incidental Merry-making Fill in Time.

THE WEEK has been distinctly "Detroit week," its special features, the visit of the famous "Snow Birds" of the Detroit Golf Club, eight in number, and a golf tournament in which eighteen golfers from the home of the Free Press participated, with a team golf match, a dinner and endless merrymaking as incidentals.

For four years past the Snow Birds, winter golfers as the name implies, have held an annual meeting at Bon Air, but this year through the interest of Mr. E. H. Silliman of their home city, they were persuaded to stop off here on their way north and, gathered round the festive board, the Club with great enthusiasm, has adopted the motto "Pinehurst Forever" and promises that each year in the future, it will follow its namesakes in the flight to the land of sunshine, making Pinehurst headquarters.

Probably the most distinguished member of the group of celebrities is "Lord Swettingham, Jr.," whose arrival here created a profound sensation among the fair sex, very much to the pleasure and gratification of his royal highness who never feels quite himself unless basking in the soft glow of women's eyes; who is never able to play his best golf unless followed by a throng of admirers. Other famous members there are to be sure, but they merely form a background for the Club's Beau Brommell and to refer to them would be discourtesy to his eminence.

The party arrived by special car early in the week, dining that evening at The Carolina, a match play handicap golf tournament rounding out their stay; R. R. Sterling winning the final round from E. W. Alexander, three up and two to play. In qualification A. J. Hood with a handicap of fourteen, led the field with a card of seventy-six; Capt. Alexander's team winning from Mr. Silliman's in the team match.

The story of play is told in the following summary:

Mr. Russell's Masterpiece.

J. Townsend Russell's Picture Reading on the Bible given at The Carolina, Sunday evening, was attended by an audience which completely filled the Music hall, many standing in the corridors during the entire evening. The presentation is easily Mr. Russell's masterpiece; the artistic, literary and oratorical climax of years of creative thought.

Guests of Mr. and Mrs. Dana.

Mrs. R. W. Mann and Miss Creep of Millis, Mass., were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. I. C. Bates Dana of Great Barrington at dinner at The Carolina, Wednesday evening.

Younger Set Dine.
