MR. CLARK'S BEST ROUND 101

Eighty-Three Years Old he Plays the Golf Course Daily

Eighty-three years old, March 2nd, D. N. Clark of Woodbury, Conn., has rounded out a remarkable winter, playing his daily round since his arrival early in December, with one hundred and one a fair average on the number one course. The card affords an interesting basis for comparison, for in all truth, it demonstrates that "age is merely a condition of mind."

OUT—5 6 4 6 5 6 7 4 6—49
IN—6 5 5 5 7 6 7 4 7—52—101

Mr. Clark's birthday anniversary was pleasantly remembered by Berkshire guests in the presentation of a watch and fob and a birthday cake. In responding, Mr. Clark said that he attributed his excellent health to the beneficial exercise derived through golf and that by aid of it, he was planning to observe many more birthdays at Pinehurst.

THE FIDDLER'S CONVENTION

Season's Most Unique Treat Promised For Thursday Evening Next

Carolina the Place, Eight-Thirty the Hour, and Decision as to Musical Supremacy the Object

THURSDAY evening next, March the twenty-first, is the date selected for the second annual "Fiddler's Convention" with The Carolina music room the place, eight-thirty the hour, and the purpose not alone the most entertaining affair of the season, but the very worthy object of raising money for the Public School for native white children.

Very plainly and briefly expressed, the affair is no more or less than a competition between native violinists of which there are many, for the "fiddle" has long been the one instrument which has provided the rural "orchestra." If one assumes from this statement that the evening is to be lacking in musical quality or harmony, the error should be immediately corrected, for "art is ever an expression of man's joy" and prince or peasant, the musician is one whose soul goes into the instrument he loves.

Tenderness, pathos, and a quaint humor, absolutely unique, the evening provides; a rare treat none should miss, and the only regret is the fact that the capacity of the music hall is limited and a repetition of the evening's program can be hardly counted upon owing to the wide range from which the contestants will be gathered. For those who are declared the leaders in the evening's program, suitable prizes will be given; a competent committee to make the awards.
