FIVE CENTS

WHITLATCH DEFEATS PURVES

Match Play Remarkable Week for Advertising Golfers

Five Distinct Events Characterize Closing Play of Most Successful Meeting in History

SATURDAY'S play in the Advertising Golf Tournament rounded out a glorious week of perfect weather, interesting competition and congenial companionship, the program including not only the men's final match play round, but mixed foursomes, men's foursomes, handicaps in three classes, a consolation handicap, a woman's handicap, and the conclusion of the special events; the possession of no less than thirty trophies being decided. Interest of the day naturally centered in the final championship trophy between Marshall Whitlatch of the Oakland Club and R. M. Purves of Woodland, which the Oakland player won on the seventeenth green, three up and one to play. Throughout the match, an element of uncertainty held the attention of a big gallery, a contest which will furnish topic for conversation and nineteenth green explanations for many a day to come.

Going out in thirty-nine, Whitlatch made the turn two up, winning the second, third, fourth and ninth holes and losing the first and sixth; the fifth and eighth being halved. A topped drive which made the rough at the left cost Whitlatch the tenth in a halved 6, for Purves spoiled a good drive with a bad second. A brilliant third captured the eleventh for Purves, and the twelfth was halved in a perfect 4. Straight down the alley from the start, Whitlatch won the thirteen (5-6) through a stroke gained on a poor tee shot by Purves, a pair of 5's halved the fourteenth, and 3's the fifteenth, where Purves made the green with Whitlatch adjoining it. The sixteenth was a halve in 4, with the advantage in favor of Whitlatch. The tee shots on the critical seventeenth placed Whitlatch just between the trap and the green, while Purves was hole high on the other side of a whisker bunker. Both approaches were unsatisfactory, but Whitlatch went down in 4, while Purves required an extra stroke. Coming in Whitlatch took thirty-nine strokes for the eight holes and Purves forty-one. In the semi-final, Mr. Whitlatch advanced on a four and three win from George C. Dutton of Oakley, and in the second round was three and two with W. J. Macdonald of Calumet, turning in a card of seventy-eight. His first round was six and four over T. A. Ashley of Woodland.

Mr. Purves' progress was not seriously interfered with except in the second round with I. S. Robeson of Oak Hill, where a brilliant rally gave him an opportunity to win out on the nineteenth lowing his victory over the Oak Hill player, defeated Don M. Parker of Garden City by five and four. In the consolation, Mr. Ashley and Mr. Wright, the two players beaten by the winners of the championship in the first round, came together and played twenty holes before Mr. Ashley won.

Other close matches were the first round between Harold Slater of Fox Hills and J. D. Plummer of Springfield. Three down at the turn, the Massachusetts player captured the tenth, twelfth, green. Three down at the seventh, the Woodland player rallied for wins on the eighth and ninth, with a pair of 3's, halved the tenth in 4, won the eleventh, 4-5, halved the twelfth in 4, the thirteenth in 5, the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth in 4's, lost the seventeenth 6-5, won the eighteenth, 4-5, to even the match, and won out on the extra hole, 4-5. Purves advanced to meet Robeson on the six and four win from George Wright of Wollaston, and fol-

lost the thirteenth, won the fourteenth, but could do no better than a half on the fifteenth; Slater winning the sixteenth, losing the short seventeenth and the home hole, 4-5. In the second round George C. Dutton of Oakley, winner of the United Championship in 1901, defeated Slater, three up and one to play in a keen contest. The first round matches between Mr. Robeson and J. J. Hazen of St. Andrews, and Mr. Macdonald and
