BECKER'S MASTERPIECE

W. G. Clark, H. C. Fownes and A. C. Aborn Divide Honors in Tin Whistle Three Ball Handicap Match

"BECKER'S masterpiece" the annual three-ball match of the Tin Whistles, has been most appropriately styled. The chances are that if you want to know just what it is and just how the six point system of scoring is carried out, you will either have to ask "Beck" or possibly, "Henry". ¶ Briefly in the system of scoring six points are to be accounted for on each hole and a player may score four, three, two, one or nothing in the following combinations: If A beats B and C he gets four points. ¶ If B beats C he gets two and C nothing. ¶ If B and C tie or halve they get one each. ¶ If A and B tie and beat C they get three each and C nothing. ¶ If A, B and C all tie they get two each. ¶ Handicaps equalize the field and twenty-seven qualify at medal play for match in nine divisions of three each which are drawn by lot. ¶ The summary below tells the story and match play is shown in bracket form to make the explanation more clear.

In the final match round of last week's competition, keen play gave Walter G. Clark first, Henry C. Fownes, second and tied with A. C. Aborn who lost the play-off. ¶ Twenty-seven players qualified and Robert Hunter won the gold medal offered for the best net score with seventy-nine, his handicap five. E. A. Johnston (11) was second in eighty and J. R. Towle (16) third in eighty-one.
