PINEHURST GOLFER'S MECCA

(Concluded from page nine)

Pinehurst or, in fact, at many of the southern courses. Everywhere is to be found the tough, wiry Panama grass, the only grass that will stand the hot rays of the sun. The turf is excellent. It is almost impossible to get a bad lie. The subsoil is of sand, and the club head bites through as a sharp knife through well-ripened cheese. For those who prefer the running-up shots to the pitched affairs, Pinehurst is the place. There it is possible to approach to almost every hole with a putter from a distance of nearly 50 yards.

Every variety of shot in the world is at Pinehurst, and the holes are as varied and diversified as will be found on any course in this country. Of the old type of cross bunkers there are few, but the traps and pits are there by the score. None of them punishes a good shot and all the greens are wonderfully well guarded. The result of this is that the golfer is obliged to play a careful game or invite trouble from the start. It is a curious sight to watch some of the golfers who come from courses whose fairways are a half mile wide, so that neither a hook nor a slice is penalized. They learn their lessons quickly, and after two days' play are golfing with a care that they had hitherto unknown.

The fairways at Pinehurst are not narrow, neither are they wide, and the rough is something to be avoided. It is almost entirely scrub oak. None of it is tall, but the ball is just as likely to be found back of a tough sapling as anywhere. Here is where the darky caddies prove to be so useful. They can, after a 150-yard slice that has landed in this scrub oak and without hesitation walk right up to the ball. The loss of a ball is, in consequence, unusual. * *
