TALES OF SLAVERY DAYS

gravely assuring the person who applied for help that the remedy would prove effective and would drive away the "witch" which it was declared an enemy had sent against the sick man. ¶ Another negro superstition regards the virtue of the last tail-bone of an entire black cat in making the owner invisible. A story about this fetish will show how it must have come down from Africa, where charms of all kinds have always been such vogue. About twenty-five years ago a negro convict in the State prison here, employed in a stone quarry getting out granite for the penitentiary, asked leave to use his noon-time in doing some cooking. This being granted he prepared a pot, under which he made a brisk fire, the pot being almost full of water, and when the latter had boiled he produced a black cat in a sack, which he plunged into the water, the animal being wrapped in the sack so it would not scratch him. He let it so remain until the next day and then with great care took the carcass out of the sack and picked out the proper bone. When a prison guard asked him what he would do with this he replied that his time in the penitentiary was nearly ended and when it was out he could go where he liked, without being seen by any human eye. He expressed entire faith in this and declared that the owner of a "cat-bone," which ought to be worn in a little buckskin bag around the neck, was absolutely invisible. He confided to the officer that he had owned such a bone and that he would not have gotten into trouble; that is been arrested, if he had had it in his possession at the critical time. ¶ The writer finds that this belief in the efficiency of the cat-bone exists to a considerable extent among older negroes of the ruder sort, though the young negroes know very little about it. The younger negroes, by the way, are quite a distinct class from the older ones, and the gap between the new and the old is widening every year. Many of the younger regard the older people of their race with a great deal of indifference, not to say contempt, and they would, so far as up-country negroes are concerned, be inclined to consider the coast negroes of the latest importation above referred to as being a race apart. It is to be doubted whether they would, as a matter of fact, have anything to do with them. There is no doubt that the extreme down-country blacks retain many more of the African characteristics. They have to be controlled in block, so to speak. That is also the experience in the Yazoo delta in Mississippi, where there are vast communities in which whites are in the proportion of one to a hundred or even less, but yet control the blacks. In some of the communities the old system of overseers has virtually been continued, and while it is asserted that there is neither slavery nor yet peonage, there is a control, which, no matter what may be said on the other side, is a necessity for the preservation of the best interests of the community, since, if left absolutely to themselves the blacks would surely go wild.
