of this sort than of any other kind under the sun. You simply get the fish log run as they say in the woods, and you get them. It is a right certain conclusion that you will get fish if you go in after them, and that you will get a big share of what fish do not get into the channel and hide. The uncertainty is who is to have the enthusiasm to go in after them. Not that here is any backwardness. You go to a mill pond draining and you may be sure that the crowd in the water will be plenty big enough to make the performance worth the price of admission. The whole length of the pond you will see a muddy mass of men, and you never saw more fun in your life. The fellow who would get hot in such a place would have to behave or be doused in the mud. You are forced to be happy when you are in such a good natured crowd. Of course you do not have to fish unless you want to, and maybe if you really want something to eat you can buy your fish. Speaking of something to eat, here is where you see eating. People come to a thing of this sort for miles, for they want the fish, and they also want to share in the fun. They come a foot, in cars, in buggies, in wagons, and they bring feed for themselves and for their mules and stay two or three days. The crowd is as interesting in its civic life while the picnic is on as is the fishing. The heterogeneous mixture of automobiles, and every kind of vehicle parked in the woods and lined along the road affords a study of character, and sometimes a study of untangling of traffic problems. The country fair is not in hearing distance in some respects. The event presents a lot of interesting phases, and if it cannot be looked upon as exactly what you would expect from a fishing tour it has some other features, for it is romantic if not in line with procedure.

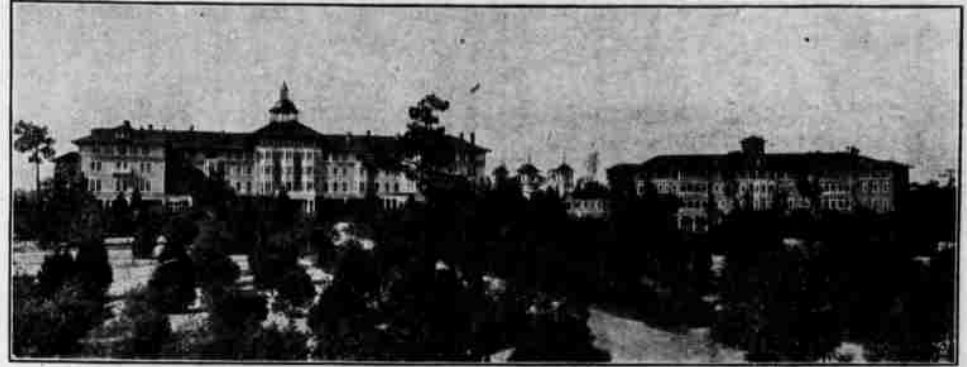

Going fishing in the mud of the mill pond is not the only way of fishing in the Pinehurst holiday belt. If you are inclined to the other practice you can go over to Little River around Thaggard's, or down to Drowning Creek or over to Deep River, and fall in with some of the folks who know where the pools are, and who know the language of the craft, and you can fish and lazy around, and eat an out door dinner, and mix with the fellows of the order until you are sated, for there are fish and a lot of them, and a lot of good places and a lot of good fishermen in Moore County. ¶ Pass the sign some morning that you want to go fishing and you will find the infection in the air, and shortly you will pick up some man who will go along and show you all the roads to the fishing holes and how to fish, and before you come home you will be loaded up with enough local history and tradition to write an interesting volume. ¶ You can fish around here in any language, and if that does not suit, when you have caught all the fish in the neighborhood streams you can go down to the sounds and hire a steam-craft to go out and catch them by the ton. ¶ Folks in this country strive to please and get you what you want.
