ALEX ROSS WINS THE OPEN

Leads Amateur Champion Three and Open Champion Four Strokes

Quimet lost the Open Championship to Alexander Ross by the narrow margin of three strokes, the cards 71-75-146 and 79-70-149, but he retrieved himself by breaking the number two course record with his afternoon rounds which with extended tees, is the equivalent of sixty-seven under ordinary conditions. ¶ The Champion's undoing was a pulled tee shot on the first hole of the morning round, a ball with wonderful distance which swung far off to the left across the railroad track and close up to the moving picture theatre. The result was an 8 where a 4 is his customary score, three or four strokes which would have tied or won. ¶ His afternoon round ranks in golfing annals here in importance only with the phenomenal seventy-five of Gladys Ravenscroft, and the remarkable thing about it is that there were six mistakes, all of which added a stroke.

On the first hole, for instance, the second was to the right of the green. On the fifth, he lost a stroke through being trapped on his second, and on the short ninth he was trapped on his iron. ¶ Coming home he took three putts on the fourteenth green, and on the sixteenth, his second over-ran the green to a trap. On the seventeenth he missed a putt. ¶ Cards:

Hagan was third with one hundred and fifty and Tom Macnamara, generally regarded as Ouimet's most dangerous rival, recorded one hundred and fifty eight, four strokes worse than Jesse Guilford.

¶ No cards were scarce among the amateurs, Travis, Herreshoff, Worthington and half a dozen others all being among the missing. ¶ The scores:
