MISS BALLIN STARS

could well sustain his play. Fred A. Otis of the Agawam Hunt, an old hand at the game, always wielding a reliable racket, was not able to maintain the pace. He met Mack in the first round, and had to give way before the swift and inevitable returns, 6-0, 6-0. Charlie Horton progressed as far as the semi-final round, where he gracefully stepped aside for the victor to the same tune.

But Mack did not carry off the lion's share of the honors. These were reserved for Miss Florence Ballin, the West Side champion, and holder of the Pinehurst cup. She met no very serious opposition in the main event, holding the trophy against the combined efforts of the entire local brigade, the reserves called in from the plantations and the guests arrived for the express purpose of disputing her title. Paired with Hugh Whitehead she also surged to the fore in the mixed doubles. They lobbed their way over Miss Eleanor Abbe and T. H. Hall into the second round, 6-2, 6-1. They beat Mrs. J. V. Hall and Mack, the winner of the men's singles by hard smashing at the net, and steady team work, 6-3, 6-2; and they were on the crest of the wave by the time they took on Miss Carolyn Bogart and Charles Horton in the finals.

To make a clean sweep of it she and Miss Patterson outplayed Mrs. J. V. Hall and Miss Esther Tufts in the last round of the Women's doubles, and annexed that prize to their collections.

The hardest single battle in the week's events was the contest in the final round of the Men's doubles by Mack and Hall against Otis and Whitehead. The latter team had played together before, and moreover towards the end of the week had worked off some of the rust of the office, and put on a little fighting edge. The consequence was that they gave the champion and his partner all they were looking for. Holding the net through no matter what bombardment, and returning rapid fire with rapid fire, they drove the first set into deuce, and won their own serve every time until the 12th game. Here a bit of fancy lobbing ran them out of the game and the set. Mack and Hall went through the defence a little more easily on the second round, which finished 6-3 in their favor. But the battle was stiffer than ever on the last set. It was the same old struggle to hold the net. And for half an hour no advantage was gained by either side. The faster and more brilliant play of the Mack-Hall combination was offset by the smooth and coordinate movements of the Otis-Whitehead team, and by their dogged persistence.

At this point the champion set up a renewed and particularly vicious barrage, drove in the outposts, gained the net, and smashed his way through the stale mate to victory.
