AN ALIBI

The Outlook, for all its outward cheerfulness, is keenly conscious of its sins of omission from week to week, but between the Government, which cut down the size of the paper this winter, and the advertisers, who just won't stay out, we are up against it for space. You can't blame the advertisers. A testimonial from one of them is printed in this issue. It is effectiveness of the kind therein extolled that is responsible for the constantly increasing encroachment of advertisers on our sadly insufficient columns.

An Appreciation

"Mr. R. W. Page, Outlook Office, Dear Sir: Kindly cut out my ad. on Scottish Terrier. One insertion was sufficient. I knew your valuable publication would bring results, and it did. The dog died the next day. Yours truly, W. J. M."

A CORRECTION

In our account of the Silver Foils Flag Contest, in our last issue, we over generously awarded a handicap of 30 to Miss Kate Bomann, where we should have held her down to 4 strokes. As it is inconceivable that the Silver Foils secretary could have made a mistake in the entry book we will just have to blame it on the printer, or if he won't stand for it, put it up to the proof reader. As the secretary has on two separate occasions this winter, left the score book where we could get hold of it for our fell purposes on the day of a tournament, we offer our apologies with all the more cheerfulness.

Frank Townsend Hutchens will continue his Exhibition of Paintings, at the Carolina, several days beyond the period originally announced. Mr. Hutchens, who won the prize at the Academie Collarossi in 1897, has frequently exhibited at the Paris Salon, the Royal Academy, the Amsterdam International, National Academy, Pennsylvania Academy, Art Institute (Chicago), Corcoran Gallery, Carnegie Institute, American Water Color Society, the New York Water Color Club and the Salmagundi Club, and has paintings permanently hung at the Herron Art Institute, Toledo Museum, West Point Museum, and elsewhere.

A recent addition to the artists's collection is a piece recently shown in the Allied Artists's exhibition in New York, named, "The War Harvest." The study was made in New England but this autumnal scene—the aged father and the daughter weighed down with the gathering of corn—is reduplicated all over the world. The picture is rich with the warm hues of autumn, which pervade the picture like haloed glories.

The rich variety of the out-of-doors in color and composition are the magnets that chiefly attract this painter and in none more so than in "The Hills in October," a derivative of a scene not far from his home at Norwalk, Conn. The picture of the many colored landscape is bright with color, notably that of the red scrub oak in the middle distance, and the pattern of design is so carefully worked out that there is clear definition of the varied perspectives.

There are two pictures in the exhibition which have been in the National academy, and they will attract attention without any advice from this column. There are many smaller pictures, too, notably among which is a charming panel, "Picardy Trees;" "Twilight at Unadilla," and "Silvermine River," the first a souvenir of peace time France and the last two of New York and Connecticut.
