"This Fine Air and Clear Sky," said a New York man this week.

And he continued, "It takes a clear sky to see Mercury in the evening heaven, but I have seen that little planet here more readily than any other place. This clear sky and open air are among the big attractions of the Sandhills."

That is what brought an astronomical expedition to Pinehurst a few years ago to study an unusual eclipse of the sun. Fogs and great humidity and hazy atmosphere are less common here than in most places.

That makes the Sandhills a desirable place for a winter home and playground.
