> Hiram Foster, who is at The Carolina this season as a special representative of Harry W. Norris, manager of the hotel as a director of sports and entertainment for the benefit of the guests, got the ball rolling, or rather, "the bird a flying" yesterday.

> Mr. Foster happened to express a yen for a game to a gues at The Carolina. The topic struck a knowing and appreciative chord with John H. Livingston, who plays quite a game himself. The best part of the story is the fact that livingston had a "bad" net a pair of Wilson racquets and a box of birds along with him. Mr Livingston is a New York advertising man who came to The Carolina for a rest with his assistant, Leonard Hibbits.

> The playing equipment was brought down from Mr. Livingston's room, some chalk was procured, a couple of floor lamps were brought in as net posts and the first thing you knew there was a regulation court set up in the ballroom. Foster, Livingston and Hibbits opened play, taking their turn as each other's partners. Before long a number of other guests were rounded up for play including Mr. and Mrs. D. W. O'Donaghue of Washington, Miss Marjorie Yates, "Bing" Hunter, Earl A. Ross and several others.

> Mr. Foster, with the assistance of Mr. Livingston, is now planning to boost the game and to give it a place on the Pinehurst sports calendar especially as a rainy day fixture.

Badminton is a game which, though it was played as early as 1873 in England and earlier still in India, was only really "discovered" by the rest of the world about 20 years ago.

A former name for the game was "battledore and shuttlecock," called that usually by those who had never seen or played it. Badminton has taken its proper place in the world of sport, as one of the very best and fastest games in existence today.

The feet play a very important part in the game, so that a pair of comfortable rubber-soled shoes is essential, and since it is a very energetic and active game, light-weight, easy-fitting clothes are also an asset.
