HOME WHERE YOU MAKE IT

DEXTER, Ind. (AP)—The chap who spent the happiest years of his life in the third grade should have followed the example of Albert Miller.

Albert, 91, and his wife, Susan Mary, 88, have spent 71 years of married life in the school-house where he was a pupil in pre-Civil War days. The log building was first school-house in this Ohio River community.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Nov. 23, 1939

Robert Harlow, Esq.
My Dear Mr. Harlow:
Enjoyed your account of the Fayetteville Scottish celebration particularly the praise you accorded the remarkably clever and graceful dancing of Miss Gibbs. I did regret that you were too modest to mention the beautiful singing of Mrs. Harlow, which was certainly one of the high lights of the occasion. Am sorry I can't plead guilty if so it be—of being an "Austrian," our good friend Donald Currie to the contrary. Was born in Boston, served two terms in the Massachusetts Legislature, am a member of the bar in Massachusetts and also New York. Am also a member of Gen. Francis Vinton Green Post 71, V.F.W.
With kindest regards.
Franz Hugo Krebs.

Nov. 23rd, 1939

My dear Mr. Harlow:
In this morning's paper you said that Mrs. Livermore and Mrs. Wood tied for first honors in Silver Foils yesterday.
First honors went to Mrs. Paterson, net 79.
Mrs. Livermore and Mrs. Wood tied for second net, 81.
All of which I thought that I had marked plainly on my carbon sheet.
Our system is quite different from that of Tin Whistles. They give major prizes in each division.
We give two prizes, at least, for each tournament, first and second. If low score happens to be in Class B, they get first prize, and the same applies to Class A. If low score is in A Class, that wins first, and second goes to low in Class B. This makes it fairer for all concerned, and some tournaments are more advantageous to Class A players, and others to B.
Notice for Silver Foils members:
There will be an extra tournament, not listed in tournament book, on Friday, December 1st. Blind bogey event. All members in Pinehurst are urged to take part.
There will be a special nine hole tournament for beginners and those playing only nine holes, and the Board of Governors hopes that each member will make a special effort to take part.

FOX HUNT

of Lloyd Tate, master of the hounds, proved too much, however when the hounds had brother Reynard on his back. Lloyd, feeling a sudden rush of tenderheartedness, leaped off his horse and mixing up with the barking quadrupeds, snatched the fox and put it under his arm, away from the maddening teeth of the hounds.
"Let's take him back alive," Tate ventured. This was met with a unanimous aye vote, and that's exactly what happened. Thus, there's a new pet in town.
L. K. Christie of New York, a guest at The Carolina, expressed a desire to take the fox back home with him when he and Mrs. Christie return to the big city.
Others participating in the hunt included Mrs. Christie, Mr. Stephen Comstock, who rode his own mare, Miss Hilda Muller, the two Tate youngsters, Billy and "Junebug," A. Corbett Alexander, John Thomas, Eliot Barta, Mrs. W. Fitzgibbon and Howard Hobson. The cast was made in the Watson's Lake region.

GEORGE W. COAN

WINSTON SALEM, Nov. 23 — George W. Coan, pioneer Southern business man and one time secretary and treasurer of the Reynolds Tobacco company, died here today after a six weeks illness.
September and October were the driest two-month fall period since detailed weather records were started in Kansas in 1887.

MOST DELIRIOUS OF ARTS

Young grandpop Hollender and the Balaban freres of movie note, were patiently explaining that moving pictures are a product. Grandpop does not look it, but he is one of the founding fathers of the most delirious of all arts, that of movie press gentry. Among other feats, he took "outstanding" when it was just a long word starting with o and nursed it and petted it and taught it tricks so that now if you don't see a movie advertised as "outstanding" you suspect that even its producer, director and actors admit that it stinks in spades doubled and redoubled.

"You do or you don't like spinach, olives or anchovies," said grandpop. "But whatever your likes are, you do not rate yourself the authority on public taste of spinach, olives or anchovies. However, let you see a couple of movies and you are a movie critic. Everybody is, and I guess that is why the pictures appeal so strongly to people. Everybody likes to consider himself or herself an authority."

"An intriguing thought," said John Balaban. "Don't forget, though that the escape factor is the big thing. Folks can sit in the movies for a time and divorce themselves from realities. With realities the nuisance they often are, the release of the movies is providential."

"By realities you mean bills and taxes and bills and expenses and bills? If so, you are plenty right, brother," declared Dave Balaban. "I hope a picture is colossal when to some people it may be colousal with the accent on the louse, but I had better sell it to escape a slug from realities myself. Like artistic beans, or superb herring, or epic hash."

"Or like outstanding strudel?" venture Grandpop Hollender.

Having heard Bob Michels, Cecil DeMille, Sid Lanfield and divers other fellows in the motion picture business discuss art by the yard and appraise genius in terms of tickets, this further probe into why you and I pay our millions to see the pictures seemed bluntly educational.

Education in the merchandising of the movies was carried further as your obedient servant went to Detroit for the world premier of Disputed Passage. It was Detroit's first world premier of a picture and was tied-up with an official unveiling of 1940 automobiles by Carl Krueger, the picture press agent who made show business history when he put on the Union Pacific premier at Omaha and dragged a couple of hundred outsiders into that town to see the natives dressed up in the whiskers and fashions of frontier days.

From the Disputed Passage-automobile tie-up I thought that the picture must be about a traffic jam, but it was about a couple of doctors, Dorothy Lamour and the Sino-Japanese incident. Dottie is a nice girl who usually has a sarong and the tremendous histrionic capabilities of an Easter egg. In Disputed Passage she does not have a sarong. There I go being a critic. I must be wrong because the front of the hotel where Dottie was docted, and the front of the theatre, was jammed by people anxious to get a gander at La Dottie. Some little-girls outwitted those dicks at the hotel and climbed 15 flights of stairs to waylay Dottie at her door and get her signature.

Dottie's sarong was exhibited to awed millions. This treasure was guarded by a grim, valiant group of our nation's defenders. A bagpipe band attired in Scotch sarongs played maddening melodies to prove that Scotch is Scotch and the South Seas are the South Seas but a sarong makes the whole world kin. A bevy of Boston society debs, imported as a newspaper promotion stunt, flirted their ermines at the sarong. The sarong won the popular decision.

The American Red Cross is training people who drive a lot or who have roadside businesses to administer first-aid in accidents. There are now trained crews at 2,851 stations and 2,626 "mobile" units traveling in police cars or on trucks.

Because war has caused an extreme shortage of workers, over 1,000,000 boys and girls of the Hitler Youth organization are doing farm work, assisting in the postal, railway and government offices, in air raid defense and the auxiliary police service.
