We don't know about you, but in spite of the new trend toward Christmas decorations in all shades of the rainbow, we still have a sentimental leaning toward the good old red and green. So we're mightily pleased with the village shops, who are decked out in holiday garb of the traditional hues.

Hoot Mon, and have ye seen the gay tartans at Romanes and Patterson? There's a good bit of red and green for you. Bright plaid patterns in various colors, make up an attractive collection of bags, skirts, glengarries, dressing gowns and wool slippers. The Scotch design is further carried out in scarves, change purses, tiny bagpipe pins, and a novel pencil case fashioned like a golf bag with pencils for clubs. A featherweight couch throw of brushed alpaca wool makes an excellent gift.

With a hop, skip and a jump across the heather we are away to the land of windmills and wooden shoes. Remember the custom of Dutch children of placing their shoes before the fireplace for St. Nicholas to fill? Foster's Remembrance Shop has real wooden shoes that will delight the children. Another novelty you'll appreciate is the cane with a flashlight in the top, to make night walking easier.

Take warning that you'll probably end up keeping it for yourself if you buy one of the new pigskin bags at Madame et La Jeune Fille. They're so wonderfully big and easy to get into. Among other gifty gadgets there are small crystal lighters in a tulip design, a tiny flashlight with key ring on one end, and a neat little package of Bendel soaps and bath oils. Incidentally, for the personal touch, you may buy handkerchiefs there and have them initialed in time for Christmas.

Handkerchiefs remind us of Corina's, where they have some beauties in the way of evening hankies; wispy chiffons embroidered in dainty sequin designs to match those sequin trimmed gowns.

We've already told you about the Herb Farm products at the Colony, but we'd like to add mention of the kitchen herbs done up as an old fashioned nosegay. New Englanders should appreciate the Maple Grove syrups and candies there done up in neat packages. The potpourri package of herbs is also very nice. The cocktail jacket is certainly becoming a fixture for semi-formal or afternoon wear. Some of the nicest we've seen are at Purcello's. There is a very nice black knit sweater embroidered in multi-colored sequins, and an especially nice sky blue one trimmed with hand painted designs which are the latest thing for the evening sweaters.

Clow's Gift Shop has a novelty set of imported Scotch perfumes in the same shaped case as the pencil container we told you about earlier, except that instead of pencils the bag contains three slim perfume bottles. We liked the modernistic desk clock there. It's a Seth Thomas, just a round yell ow disk marked off in cream enamel.

A recent shipment to the London Galleries is the complete collection of a buyer who has spent several years in China collecting antique art objects. Our especial favorite is the set of hand carved jade signs of the Zodiac, but they are only one item in a really splendid collection. You'll be enchanted with the two matching Cork glass bottles there with steeple topped stoppers.

Razook's has a lovely new collection of Hattie Carnegie costume jewelry which includes necklaces in the newest combination of crystal and moonstone beads, at really unbelievably reasonable prices. We like the hand-quilted satin robes there too.

Here's hoping that gift list is nearly complete, and you're all set for a jolly holiday season.

CHRISTMAS CANTATA

In the Pinehurst school auditorium Tuesday night 63 boys and girls of the high school glee club will present a Christmas Cantata, "The Music of Christmas." Miss Annie Marie Choate directs the glee club, and promises a fine rendition of this cantata.

The choir will appear Tuesday in their vestments for the first time. There is a small admission charge of 15 cents and 25 cents to raise funds to pay for the vestments and the cantata books. If you enjoy music, especially lovely Christmas carols, plan to be present at this performance.

James Carter is spending the holidays with his sister, Mrs. Hubert McCaskill and family. James is attending school at Carolina.
