"The wise man knows an ignorant man because he has been ignorant himself, but the ignorant man cannot recognize the wise because he has never been wise."

SEASONABLE FOODS.

A pretty salad to serve on occasions is:

Pepper Lilies.—Cut sweet green peppers in petal-shaped points, leaving them jointed at the stem end; remove the pulp and seeds. Make a ball of cottage cheese into which the tips of the peppers finely chopped are mixed, and add one-fourth of a cupful of cream. Rice the yolks of hard-cooked eggs and sprinkle over the cheese balls; press the pepper petals gently to the side of the ball and set in a curled leaf of lettuce hearts.

Nabisco Blaque.—To plain ice cream mixture of vanilla flavor add a cupful or more of crumbled nabisco wafers. Serve with whipped cream.

Potato Dish.—Brown a tablespoonful of shredded onion in two tablespoonfuls of butter. Add one-half teaspoonful of flour and a pint of milk. Now add two or three mashed potatoes and cook smooth; finish with the yolk of egg well beaten, and serve.

Salmon a la Genevieve.—Put a teaspoonful of butter in a sauce pan, add a chopped onion, a sprig of parsley, a small piece of carrot, a blade of nutmeg and a bunch of herbs, a few cloves and half a pint of white stock. Simmer these half an hour, then strain over the salmon in another pan and cook a quarter of an hour. While the fish is cooking melt three tablespoonfuls of butter in a pan, add three tablespoonfuls of flour; pour the liquor from the pan and cook for a few minutes, then pour round the fish, which has been placed on a hot platter. Add a little lemon juice or vinegar to the sauce just before serving.

Medford Steak.—Round round steak with a wooden potato masher until thin. Cut in small pieces, lay on a bit of bacon and a little chopped onion; season well with salt and pepper; roll up and tie, put into a baking dish with just enough water to keep from burning and bake one hour. Veal is very nice cooked this way and cooked in milk instead of water. Thicken the gravy and pour around the meat when serving.

A NEW GRETNA GREEN

Many Couples Come To Bennettsville From North Carolina To Be Married.

(From Bennettsville Advocate.)
Up until the year 1754 couples in England experienced little difficulty in getting married, either with or without the consent of parents or guardians. But in that year an act abolishing clandestine marriages came into force and after that date runaway couples were forced to seek the hospitality of a country where it sufficed for them to declare their wish to marry in the presence of witnesses. It was natural that they should select the nearest and most accessible point for the consummation of the conjugal knot and Gretna Green, a small village in Dumfriesshire, Scotland, three-quarters of a mile from the river Sark, which is the dividing line between England and Scotland, became notorious as the resort of eloping couples who had failed to obtain the consent of parents or guardians to their union.

At Gretna Green the ceremony was usually performed by the blacksmith but the toll-keeper, ferryman, or in fact any person might officiate and the toll-house, the inn, or Gretna Hall was the scene of many such weddings.

The romantic traffic was practically, though not necessarily, put to an end in 1856, when the law required one of the contracting parties to reside in Scotland three weeks previous to the ceremony.

To the young people of the counties over the North Carolina line, Bennettsville has become a new Gretna Green, many couples coming here in the course of a year to escape the more stringent marriage laws of North Carolina.

The following is a list of marriage licenses issued from September 2nd to September 10th by Probate Judge Julian G. McLaurin.

A Picture In Black and White

Mrs. Dobbins was dead. Judging from the faint smile on her thin lips she was glad of it. She had never been a robust woman, had been in a decline for a year and now the end had come. An early marriage had brought her many children; poverty added its burden to her lot of incessant care and hard work. She had been a very fair woman with soft, pale hair and pale blue eyes, never very far from tears. Her manner had been very gentle, even apologetic, and her submissiveness pained one like the submissiveness of a circus dog scourged through its tricks. At last she was "out of it all," lying very straight and still in her small room. The only sound that broke the silence was the sobbing of her children.

Two life-long friends lingered to draw the white sheet over the wasted fingers a white jasmine flower. Then they sought to speak a few words of sympathy to the bereaved husband.

They found him on the piazza wrapped in gloom. Mr. Dobbins was a small man with a solemn and stately mien, his hair was jet black, so were his eyes, his nose jutted forward like a sharp boulder from the face of a granite crag and the corners of his mouth turned down like the points of a horse-shoe. A grim, unsmiling man was Mr. Dobbins, especially if all about him were joyous and gay; now he appeared sadder than the saddest. The two ladies approached him with words of consolation and of appreciation of the many virtues of his dead wife; they spoke of her kindness, her true friendliness, the sweetness of her character and her never failing industry.

"Yes," replied the heretofore one, "Annie was a good woman, I suppose, but she had her faults and nobody knew them better than I did. To be sure she was never a gad-about, she never belonged to these clubs and societies, she never read these novels and magazines, she never was no hand to run around the neighborhood gossiping. She went to church and sometimes to prayer meeting, she read her Bible, she stayed at home and cooked and washed and ironed and tended to her children. To be sure she never was much of a cook; I had to cook the steak and measure out the coffee and I always thought it took her longer to get out a week's wash than anybody I ever saw. It was amazing the wood she burnt up a-burning, just for six children and me. She was right good to wait on our lame girl but I got a sprain in my back right now from having to do all the lifting of the child. But she's gone now and her faults lay between her and her Maker."

Wrath and indignation flashed from the eyes of the small woman standing before him as she responded, "And she died of softening of the brain and a broken-heart."

DODGE BROTHERS BUSINESS SEDAN

Exceptional interest has been aroused by the practical arrangement of the interior.

The entire rear compartment furnishings—seat, seat cushions, back cushions, seat frame, foot rest, carpet and all—can be removed from the car in a few moments.

The front seat is then tilted forward, giving a gross clearance of twenty-two inches through the rear doors.

In this way, a space of sixty-four cubic feet in the rear compartment is made available for loading.

When the rear seat fixtures are back in place, the interior is complete and attractive in appearance. Its convertibility is not apparent to the eye.

Business men, farmers, salesmen, campers, tourists and everyone who has occasion, at times, to carry bulky articles or luggage, will readily appreciate the great utility of this construction.
